College of Arts and Letters

The College of Arts and Letters is the oldest, and traditionally the largest, of the four undergraduate colleges of the University of Notre Dame. It houses 17 departments and several programs through which students at both undergraduate and graduate levels pursue the study of the fine arts, the humanities and the social sciences.

Liberal Education. The College of Arts and Letters provides a contemporary version of a traditional liberal arts educational program. In the college, students have the opportunity to understand themselves as heirs of a rich intellectual and spiritual tradition and as members of a complex national and international society. The faculty of the college are committed to the life of the mind, to the critical and constructive engagement with the whole of human experience. On the basis of a firm yet broad foundation, graduates of the college are equipped for a lifetime of learning in an ever-changing world. The overall curriculum and the specific major programs encourage students to approach issues reflectively, to analyze them carefully and to express their reasoned conclusions with clarity.

The intellectual quest conducted in the College of Arts and Letters takes place in an explicitly Catholic environment. Here ultimate questions of the meaning and value of human life before God are welcome, and efforts to deal with such questions utilize the immense resources of the Catholic tradition. Inquiry and faith are seen not as opposing forces but as complementary elements of the fully human pursuit of truth.

Organization. The college’s administrative center, the Office for Undergraduate Studies, is located in 101 O’Shaughnessy Hall. Sophomores who have not yet declared a major and students of all levels in the college with questions about college or university requirements should seek advising there. Staff members are also available to discuss academic progress, problems or career goals with all students. Pre-law and preprofessional advisors are also available in this office.

Because education is not limited to the classroom, the college also sponsors or helps to subsidize events which are intended to enrich the undergraduate experience and facilitate faculty–student interaction both on and off campus.

Curricula and Degrees. The College of Arts and Letters offers curricula leading to the degree of bachelor of fine arts in Art (Studio and Design) and of bachelor of arts in:

- American Studies
- Anthropology
- Art
  - Studio
  - Design
  - History
- Classics:
  - Classical Civilization
  - Latin
- East Asian Languages and Literatures:
  - Chinese
  - Japanese
- Economics
- English
- Film, Television, and Theatre
- German and Russian Languages and Literatures:
  - German
  - Russian
- History
- Mathematics (honors only)
- Medieval Studies
- Music
- Philosophy
- Philosophy/Theology (joint major)
- Political Science
- Program of Liberal Studies
- Psychology
- Romance Languages and Literatures:
  - Spanish
  - French
  - Italian
- Sociology
- Theology

The college also offers supplementary majors, but not standalone first or degree-yielding majors, in:

- Arts and Letters Preprofessional Studies (ALPP)
- African and African American Studies
- Art History (24 hours)
- Chinese (24 hours)
- Classical Civilization
- Computer Applications (CAPP)
- Gender Studies
- German (24 hours)
- Greek (24 hours)
- French (24 hours)
- Italian (24 hours)
- Japanese (24 hours)
- Latin (24 hours)
- Medieval Studies (24 hours)
- Music (36 hours)
- Philosophy (24 hours)
- Russian (24 hours)
- Spanish (24 hours)
- Theology (25 hours)

Admission Policies. Admission to the College of Arts and Letters takes place at the end of the first year. The student body of the College of Arts and Letters thus comprises sophomores, juniors and seniors.

The prerequisite for admission of sophomores into the College of Arts and Letters is good standing at the end of the student’s first year.

The student must have completed at least 24 credit hours and must have satisfied all of the specified course requirements of the First Year of Studies Program: University Seminar; Composition; two semester courses in mathematics; two semester courses in natural science; one semester course chosen from history, social science, philosophy, theology, literature or fine arts; and two semester courses in physical education or in ROTC. (The University seminar will satisfy the relevant requirement in fine arts, literature, history, social science, philosophy or theology.) Two semesters of physical education are also required. A student who does not meet all of these conditions is retained in the First Year of Studies until all of the conditions are met. The deficiencies must be removed at the Notre Dame Summer Session or in the student’s third semester at Notre Dame.

Description of General College Requirements.

Every student graduating from the College of Arts and Letters must have a minimum of 120 credit hours and must have fulfilled all University, college and major requirements. Unless special permission has been obtained from the Office for Undergraduate Studies, special studies and directed readings courses do not satisfy university or college requirements.

Arts and Letters Requirements

- Arts and Letters Core 2
- Language 1-3
- History/Social Science 1
- *Literature and Fine Arts (whichever is not taken above) 1
- Major 8-12

* In addition to the University requirement of one history and one social science course, the college requires a third course, which can be either history or social science.

* The arts and letters student is required to complete one fine arts and one literature course.

 University requirements are described on pages 18-19.

Course Load. The normal course load in the College of Arts and Letters is five courses. The maximum number of credit hours per semester is 17. Overloads for juniors and seniors are accepted only with the permission of the deans in the Office for Undergraduate Studies and only during the designated days of the enrollment period.

Writing Requirement. Students in arts and letters are required to complete one course in their major at the 300 or 400 level designated as a writing intensive course. This course may satisfy other distributional requirements within the major. Writing intensive courses require the student to work closely with a professor throughout the semester on a significant written project.

Activity and Experiential Learning Courses. Three elective credits of the required 120 hours can be derived/obtained from the following activity courses:

- Band (Marching and Concert)
- Orchestra
- Chorale
- Glee Club
- Liturgical Choir
- Folk Choir
- Music Lessons and Ensembles
- Ballet
- Debate
- Social Concerns Seminars

Exceptions will be made for music majors.

Registering for these courses will not affect a student’s overload status. These credits do not count toward a student’s 17 semester hours. If students complete more than three of these courses, these will appear on a student’s transcript, but the extra credits will be subtracted from the student’s total number of hours at the time the graduation check is made; hence, these will not count toward the 120 hours needed to graduate.

Pass-Fail. Juniors and seniors may take one non-major, non-required elective course each semester on a pass-fail grading basis. These declarations must be made during the enrollment period of each semester, and once made, these declarations are irreversible.

Arts and Letters Degree Credit. Students should not have both examination and degree credit for the same course. For example, if students have examination placement credit for German 101, then they should neither take nor receive credit for German 101 or German 105. Similarly, students should take either Theology 100 or 200 and Philosophy 101 or 201, but not both. Economics 115 and 225 are considered to be equivalent courses, as are Economics 123 and 223. Students should take only one of each pair but not both. In cases where students have double credit for the same course (that is, both examination and degree credit), the examination credit will not be counted toward a student’s degree credit despite the fact that it will be included on the student’s transcript. A list of equivalent math and science courses can be found on page 151. The same rules about double credit apply to them also.

No courses in Logic will satisfy the University philosophy requirement for students in arts and letters. After matriculation into the college, it is the expectation that arts and letters students will complete any outstanding math or science requirements at Notre Dame.

ROTC. First-year students enrolled in any of the three ROTC programs are exempted from the University’s physical education requirement. Credits received for 100- and 200-level ROTC courses do not count toward a student’s 120 credit hours, despite the fact that they appear on the transcript. They will be manually subtracted from the student’s total number of hours appearing thereon. Credits received for 300- and 400-level courses will count as elective credit in the College of Arts and Letters.

Dual Degree. Programs leading to dual degrees (two undergraduate degrees, such as a bachelor of arts and a bachelor of business administration) are distinct from programs in which a student receives one degree with two majors (such as a bachelor of business administration with a major in finance and a major in political science). Dual degree programs require the permission of the deans of both colleges. There are additional requirements which usually result in the need for a fifth year. Dual degree students in the college are required to take the Arts and Letters Core Course (CORE 211 and CORE 212).

The requirements for a dual degree generally are as follows: The student completes all of the University requirements, all of the requirements for both colleges, all of the requirements for both majors, and the total number of degree credits specified for a dual degree in two colleges. While the total number of hours required does depend on the two major programs, the minimum required total number of degree credits is set to be 30 degree credits beyond the college total for the college with the greater number of degree credits.

International Studies. In light of the expansion of Notre Dame’s international study programs, the provost’s office has asked that students be encouraged to participate in University programs whenever possible. Limited exceptions, however, will be made for students whose academic or programmatic needs cannot be met through existing Notre Dame programs, i.e., Chinese or Russian majors who wish to pursue language instruction in Beijing or St. Petersburg, or art history majors who may require a semester in Florence. These exceptions will be made on an individual basis after extensive consultation with both the students and their faculty advisors.
Student Awards and Prizes

COLLEGIATE AWARD IN MODERN AND CLASSICAL LANGUAGES
The Robert D. Nuner Modern and Classical Language Award — presented to the graduating senior in the College of Arts and Letters with a first or second major, in any classical or modern foreign language, who has earned the highest cumulative grade point average.

AMERICAN STUDIES
James E. Murphy Award for Excellence in Journalism — open to graduating American Studies majors or non-majors with an interdisciplinary minor in Journalism, Ethics and Democracy.
Paul Neffle Award for Journalism — awarded to a senior in American studies for excellence in journalism.
Hugh A. O’Donnell Award in American Studies — awarded to a senior in American studies for superior academic achievement.
Prof. James Wishey Award — awarded to a senior in American studies for notable achievement in writing.

ANTHROPOLOGY
The Kenneth E. Moore Founding Chair Award — awarded to the outstanding senior in cultural anthropology.
The Rev. Raymond W. Murray, C.S.C., Award in Anthropology — awarded to the outstanding senior majoring in anthropology.

ART, ART HISTORY, AND DESIGN
Grief Art Awards — awarded to outstanding senior B.F.A. students to defray the cost of their thesis exhibitions.

POLITICAL SCIENCE

George Brinkley Service Award — awarded to the student who best exemplifies the political science department’s ideal of public service through service to the department, the University, or the wider community.
Special Arts and Letters Requirements

Language Requirement. Students in arts and letters are required to reach intermediate proficiency in a foreign language, but "intermediate proficiency" is defined differently in each of the languages, depending on the complexity of the language itself and the intensity of the course. Students with some background in the language they elect will be placed by examination: the CEEB Achievement Test, AP and SAT II tests, or the departmental placement examinations given during first-year orientation and prior to spring preregistration. Depending upon the outcome of these examinations, students may receive up to six credits in a given language. If for some reason a student receives more than six hours of credit, which appears on the transcript, they will be manually subtracted from the total number of degree credits. Regardless of the scores on these exams, it is impossible for a student to test out of the language requirement in the College of Arts and Letters. Everyone must take at least one course at the appropriate level which deals with texts in the original language. For the specific details of a given language offering or program, check with the relevant department.

Core Course. All sophomores in the College of Arts and Letters enroll in the two-semester core course — Ideas, Values, Images. Through a careful selection of readings and problems, the course introduces the new liberal arts students to the disciplines and subject matter normally encountered in the college’s various departments. A special effort is made to recognize the questions of value which underlie the various topics studied in the course. The course is normally taught in semester sections of 18, and the students stay together for the entire academic year. Authors of some of the books being read, special contributions by the fine arts departments of the college, and audiovisual materials supplement the ongoing class discussions.

With the introduction of a core course into the curriculum for the academic year 1979-80, the college acknowledged the increasingly urgent question of the nature and purpose of liberal education and attempted to provide its students with some productive ways to think about that question.

For descriptions of the University and other colleges’ requirements, see pages 18-19.

Arts and Letters Programs

The programs offered by the College of Arts and Letters include majors, supplementary majors, and minors, which may be either departmental or interdisciplinary. The latter includes what were formerly called concentration and area study programs. Every student in the college must complete one major sequence. Supplementary majors and minors are optional and may be taken to supplement or enhance a student’s major but do not lead to graduation in and of themselves.

Majors

A major sequence is a carefully chosen combination of courses from an individual department or program that stand alone in qualifying students for an undergraduate degree. They usually consist of between eight to 12 courses. In contrast to the University and college requirements that provide students with broad exposure to a variety of the liberal arts and sciences, the major affords the student an opportunity to gain more specialized knowledge of a particular field or discipline.

The major in liberal arts programs is normally chosen during the sophomore year and is completed during the junior and senior years. Each spring before preregistration, the college holds a series of programs and meetings to inform the students about the various majors so that they may make intelligent choices. Students pursue their majors under the direction of the departmental or program chair and its advising staff.
Supplementary majors are those that cannot stand alone in qualifying a student for an undergraduate degree but must be taken in conjunction with a primary major. They include both interdisciplinary and departmental offerings.

Self-Designed Majors. A new program for a special self-designed major was approved by the college council during the 1994-95 year. This is a special program for self-designed majors that will be conducted on a limited, experimental basis. While it is not the intent to predetermine the kind and nature of majors to be proposed, it is the expectation that they will involve substantive integration of the subject matter in ways that cannot be undertaken within any existing major, minor, area studies or concentration program.

The Process:

1. Interested students, in consultation with three faculty sponsors from at least two departments, should present a detailed written proposal of their major (which has been signed by their faculty sponsors) to the Undergraduate Studies Advisory Committee no later than Friday before the midsemester break of each semester. One of the faculty sponsors should be identified as the chair of the supervising committee.

2. Approval of the special major will be granted by the dean, on the recommendation of the Undergraduate Studies Advisory Committee. The committee will review the proposals and communicate their recommendations to the students before the preregistration period begins. As it deliberates, the committee may ask for additional information from the student, faculty sponsors and other colleagues in related areas to assist in further refining and rewriting the original proposal. It is the expectation that the on-campus portions of the major will rely heavily on existing courses.

3. Special majors must culminate in a capstone essay or where appropriate, other work, which will be evaluated by more than one faculty member. (In most cases, it is assumed that the faculty evaluators will be the faculty sponsors). A detailed proposal of the capstone project must be submitted to the faculty sponsors by November 1 of the senior year. It is expected that a capstone essay will consist of between 30 and 50 pages (7,500-15,000 words).

4. Changes in an individual program need the approval of the chair of the supervising committee and the dean. If students discover midstream that they are unable to complete the special major, it may be “dropped,” but they must then complete one of the traditional departmental majors. Retroactive proposals will not be considered. Thus, these programs should be well under way by the end of the junior year.

5. Administration of special majors will take place through the Office of Undergraduate Studies in a manner similar to that of the ALPP program; i.e., students will pick up their PINs in 101 O’Shaughnessy.

6. The college council will periodically review the special major program.

Minors

Minors are five course sequences that can either be departmental or interdisciplinary. The college has three categories of minors: Departmental, Interdisciplinary (formerly Concentrations) and Area Studies.

Departmental:
African and African American Studies
Anthropology
Art History
Classical Civilization
Classical Literature
East Asian Languages and Literature:
  Chinese
  Japanese
  German
  Greek
  Italian
  Latin
  Music
  Russian
  Theology

For details, see the departmental descriptions in the section “Programs of Study.”

Interdisciplinary (formerly called Concentrations):
Catholic Social Tradition
Education, Schooling, and Society
Gender Studies
Hesburgh Program in Public Service
Journalism, Ethics, and Democracy
Medieval Studies
Peace Studies
Philosophy and Literature
Philosophy, Politics, and Economics (PPE)
Religion and Literature
Science, Technology, and Values

Area Studies:
African Asian European Irish
Latin American
Mediterranean/Middle East
Russian and Eastern European

Electives

In addition to the University and college requirements and the major, the balance of a student’s usual five-course-per-semester program consists of elective courses, which can be drawn from the offerings of any department or college that are open to non-majors who have met the necessary prerequisites.
American Studies

Chair: Benedict F. Giamo
Professors: F. Richard Ciccone (adjunct); Eugene Halton (concurrent); Thomas J. Schlereth; Robert P. Schmulb (on leave spring 2003); Thomas J. Stritch (emeritus); H. Ronald Weber (emeritus)
Associate Professors: Elizabeth Christman (emerita); Walton Collins (adjunct); Jack Colwell (adjunct); Benedict F. Giamo
Assistant Professors: Heidi Ardizzone; Thomas Gugliclmo; Susan Ohmer
Visiting Welch Chair Professor: Alex Kotlowit (fall semester only)
Visiting Professor: Joel C. Hodson
Professional Specialist: Ruthann Johansen (Arts and Letters Core Course)

The Department of American Studies provides students with a unique opportunity to study American culture and society in challenging and innovative ways. Students majoring in American Studies explore the American experience from both integrative and disciplinary perspectives by selecting interdisciplinary courses taught by the Department's faculty as well as cross-listed classes offered by Anthropology, English, Political Science, History, and Sociology. With help from a faculty advisor, a student plans a curriculum of 12 courses, six from within American Studies and six in American subjects offered in cognate departments. The interdisciplinary courses housed in the Department of American Studies span a broad range of academic interests: Arts and Material Culture; Journalism and Media Studies; Literature and Society; and Social History/Movements. Additional areas under development include Narrative Nonfiction as well as Regional and Comparative Cultures. Courses in these academic areas typically include an historical dimension, insights gathered from a variety of sources, perspectives drawn from traditional disciplines, and an integrative approach that complements specialization. Because of its breadth, the major enables students to experience much of the richness of the College of Arts and Letters. Internships are available which offer practical experience in the potential career areas of historical research, journalism, publishing, and social service. Special features include an affiliated interdisciplinary minor in Journalism, Ethics, and Democracy.

Course Descriptions. The following course descriptions give the number and title of each course. Lecture hours per week, laboratory and/or tutorial hours per week and credits each semester are in parentheses. The instructor’s name is also included.

BEGINNING COURSES

201. The Rise and Fall of the Modern Racial Order: Race and Ethnicity in the 20th-Century United States (3-0-3)
A mixture of lecture, discussion, and in-class group projects, this course is an introduction to the history of race and ethnicity in the 20th-century United States. The key questions of the course will be: How has race, as a “social construction,” been made and un-made over the years? That is, how have the “south Italian race” and the “Anglo-Saxon race” come and gone, while the “white race” and “black race” have stayed with us? Have these groups and others encountered the nation’s racial order over the years, with some attempting to dismantle it to gain greater equality (e.g., the civil rights movement) and others attempting to shore it up to protect their own privileges (e.g., the KKK and the Zoot Suit Riots)?

250. Victorian America: Transformations in Everyday Life, 1876-1915 (3-0-3) Schlereth
An introductory American Studies course designed to interpret and integrate the cultural and social ideas, institutions, and artifacts of average Americans in the period 1876-1915. Within this Victorian era, the course will explore the changes and continuities in domestic life and housing arrangements, common foodways of eating and drinking, working places and patterns of recreational and leisure pursuits.

251. Visual America (3-0-3) Schlereth
An introductory course, offered as a sequel to Arts in America (AMST 357), that will explore dimensions of several types of visual expression—popular photography, cartography, genre and historical painting, chromolithography, the commercial and graphic arts—in American cultural history from Louis Daguerre’s development of photography in 1839 to the public exhibition of television at the 1959 New York World’s Fair.

254. The Technological American (3-0-3) Ohmer
In this course we will explore the impact new technologies have had on our domestic and economic lives. We also will discuss how new technologies have changed the way we communicate and the kinds of leisure entertainment we enjoy. Though technology is often celebrated for the promise of liberation, we will see how new inventions have also raised fears of alienation and loss of control.

255. American Identities (3-0-3) Hodson
American Identities surveys the development of American culture and society by examining constructs of identity. The course explores such questions as: What is a nation? How is national identity determined? What constitutes American identity, and how has it changed over time? Who has been included and excluded from full citizenship in the past, and why? How do multicultural societies reconcile national and group identities? Where is the United States heading as a society?

256. American Conditions: Poverty and Affluence in the United States, 1930-1990 (3-0-3) Giamo
To advance our inquiry, we will take an interdisciplinary perspective on the relationship between poverty and affluence in American culture and society. What is the nature of reality—the meaning and significance—concerning each realm of social existence? In addressing that question, we will explore the social conditions, values, and attitudes associated with each dimension, especially in relationship to the broader American experience. Historical, socioeconomic, and political approaches will be considered. In addition, we will focus on cultural perceptions of poverty and affluence, as seen through literature, photography, and film.

258. American Art: History, Identity, Culture (3-0-3) Schlereth
Introductory and historical overview of the role that several arts—architecture, painting, sculpture—played in American cultural history, 1640-1940. In addition to surveying major high style trends, attention is given to selected regional, folk, and vernacular artistic traditions. Basically a lecture-format course in which the student prepares two short papers, researches and assembles a 15-page visual portfolio, and takes two exams, a mid-term and a final.
264. American Social Experience: Traditions of Protest
(3-0-3) Ardizzone
This interdisciplinary survey of civil rights and social protest movements in the United States examines suffrage inclusion, abolitionism and Black civil rights movements, labor organizing, and women’s rights in the nineteenth and twentieth centuries, as well as several contemporary protest movements. These movements certainly question selected American ideologies, but they also draw on American values and practices. We will use history, film, fiction, journalism, and autobiographies to trace a tradition of protest which both depends on and offers challenges to a democratic society.

282. American Political Life
(3-0-3) Schmuhl
An introductory and interdisciplinary examination of American political culture, particularly contemporary political thought and behavior. Although we will trace the development of our political culture from the nation’s beginning to the present, a principal concern of the class will be the involvement of the mass media in recent political history. In short, we will attempt to come to terms with questions about the role and influence of mass communications in modern politics.

301. Fundamentals of Journalism
(3-0-3) Ciccone
What is news? What are the most effective ways of presenting news to the public? What ethical decisions are involved in gathering and reporting news? These are a few of the questions addressed in “Fundamentals of Journalism.”

305. American Landscapes: Regions and Regionalism in North America
(3-0-3) Hodson
American Landscapes examines aspects of the history, geography, politics, economy, and society of North America (the United States, Canada, and Mexico). It will explore discreet cultural regions but also adopt a comparative approach, analyzing interregional as well as transnational issues, such as immigration flows, labor standards, energy use, and environmental controls.

306. Homefronts During War
(3-0-3)
How have Americans responded at home to war and threats of war throughout the twentieth century and into the first? What internal divisions and shared identities has war inspired or revealed? We will examine not the battles and factors that determined the military outcomes, but the domestic struggles that have defined our national experience and informed many of our responses to current events. Topics will include: critiques of democracy and civil rights inclusion during WWII; treatment of Japanese Americans during WWII; development of peace movements, anti-nuclear movements; cold war politics and fears of American communism; debates over the draft, just-war, racism at home, and U.S. policies abroad in the wake of Vietnam. The final unit will focus on the Gulf War, terrorism, and developments since September 11th.

311. Television in American Culture
(3-0-3) Ohmer
This course examines the formation of commercial broadcast television in the United States, focusing on the industrial, economic, technological and social forces that have shaped the images we see. We will look at how American television developed in the competitive business climate of the 1920s and 1930s, and how advertiser-supported networks came to dominate. We then analyze the role of television in America’s social and political life: its links to suburbia and consumerism, its impact on the political movements of the 1960s, and the ways it has represented America’s changing ideas of race, gender, and ethnicity.

312f. Fashioning Identity in American History
See GSC 312.

317E. Latino/Latina American Literature
See ENGL 316.

322E. Passing in 20th-Century American Literature
See ENGL 319.

330. Culture and Society in the Great Depression
(3-0-3) Giamo
This course explores the culture and society of one of the most turbulent periods in American history. The economic collapse and ensuing national crisis altered the political, social, and symbolic landscape of the country. We will examine the historical context and social activism of this period (1929-1941), including the conditions and responses of those affected by various hardships. Also, we will be concerned with the cultural expression of Depression America as depicted in literature, film, the art of social realism, and various documentary formats.
337. Race and Ethnicity in American Television
(3-0-3) Ohmer
This course examines the formation of commercial broadcast television in the United States, focusing on the industrial, economic, technological and social forces that have shaped the images we see. We will look at how American television developed in the competitive business climate of the 1920s and 1930s, and how advertiser-supported networks came to dominate. We then analyze the role of television in America’s social and political life: its links to suburbia and consumerism, its impact on the political movements of the 1960s, and the ways it has represented America’s changing ideas of race, gender, and ethnicity.

338Z. Poverty, Inequality, and Social Struggles in America
See SOC 338.

340. Witnessing the Sixties
(3-0-3) Giammio
The purpose of this interdisciplinary course is twofold: to examine the social context and cultural change of the sixties, on the one hand, and on the other to explore the various journalistic representations of events, movements, and transformation. We will focus on the manner in which each writer witnessed the sixties and explore fresh styles of writing, such as the new journalism popularized by Tom Wolfe. Major topics for consideration include the counterculture and the movement—a combination of civil rights and anti-war protest.

347H. Era of U.S. Civil War, 1848-1877
See HIST 454.

348G. Interest Group Politics
See POLS 303.

350. The Craft of Journalism
(3-0-3) Schmuhl
This class will focus on how print and broadcast journalists work—how they think and act as well as the dilemmas they face in delivering news, analysis, and commentary. Several sessions will be devoted to presentations by visiting correspondents, editors, and producers, explaining their approaches to specific stories and circumstances. In addition, students will discuss the issues and questions raised in a few books.

351. Visual America
(3-0-3) Schlereth
Offered as a sequel to American Art (AMST 258). The course has two objectives: First, to introduce students to the various methods scholars have developed to use visual evidence in cultural history research; and second, to provide students with a content course in United States history, one where they receive an overview of the various roles that the art forms noted above have played in 19th- and 20th-century American life. Iconographic analysis—the uncovering of past and present, conflicting and paradoxical layers of cultural meanings within an image or assemblage of images—will be an important part of the course.

354. America Abroad: U.S. Media in a Global Context
(3-0-3) Ohmer
This course investigates the strategies companies adopt when fashioning media for overseas markets. The course will begin during the 1940s, when America moved aggressively outward after the isolationism of the 1930s. We will examine how U.S. media companies tried to export American values to Latin America during the war and to Japan after its surrender. The impact of satellites during the 1960s will also be noted. In discussing the 1970s and 1980s, we will examine international responses to American television news, game shows and drama. In looking at media today we will analyze international co-productions that use American stars and studios but are intended to reach a wider audience.

357. The Arts In America
(3-0-3) Schlereth
Introductory and historical overview of the role that several arts—architecture, painting, sculpture, photography, and the decorative arts—played in American cultural history, 1640-1940. In addition to surveying major high style trends, attention will also be given to selected regional, folk, vernacular, and popular artistic traditions. Basically a lecture-format course in which the student prepares one research essay and takes two exams, a midterm and a final.

360. News in American Life
(3-0-3) Ciccone
This course seeks to promote an understanding of modern media by examining the goals and motivations of newsmakers, the power of instant information, the future of news delivery and an examination of how the traditional principles of fairness, privacy and ethics are treated. Students will read several books and newspaper articles dealing with the history and the business of the media, and will use daily newspapers throughout the course.

366H. African-American History I
See HIST 371.

368H. U.S. Presidents: FDR to Clinton
See HIST 458.

369H. Jacksonian America
See HIST 369.

380. The Presidency in American Culture
(3-0-3) Ohmer
This course examines the interactions among journalists, media companies, and Presidents in the United States since the Great Depression. Throughout the term we will emphasize several general principles or trends. We will explore how new forms of technology have triggered changes in political practice, a trend that becomes clear when we analyze the role the Internet has taken in this year’s campaign. During the semester we will look at representations of Presidents and the Presidency that are embodied in films and television programs.

386H. U.S. Foreign Policy Since 1945
See HIST 458.

387H. American Peace Movement Since World War II
See HIST 474.

391E. Contemporary Short Fiction
See ENGL 392E.

401. Immigration, Ethnicity, and Race in the United States, 1840s-Present
(3-0-3)
Examining monographs, novels, film, photography, poetry, government records, and court cases, we will explore a variety of immigrant groups and time periods—from the Irish of the mid-19th century to Jaimanics, Mexicans, and the Vietnamese today. We will focus on questions of identity—how immigrants have come to understand themselves racially and ethnically over time—and questions of power—where immigrants have been located within America’s developing racial order and what difference this has made in their everyday lives—their jobs, homes, families, and opportunities.

405G. Public Policy and Bureaucracy
See POLS 405.

412. Comparative Cultural Studies
(3-0-3) Giammio
The purpose of this seminar is to introduce students to comparative dimensions of American Studies. International perspectives will be explored and approaches that compare American culture with another national culture will be encouraged. Intrnational comparative topics will also be welcome (example: Asian-American studies).

416H. American Thought, Belief, and Values
See POLS 416.

419. American Nonfiction Narrative: The Literature of Social Concerns
(3-0-3)
This course will—through both reading and writing-explore, the place and the art of what is often called literary journalism or narrative nonfiction. What makes for a compelling story? Why employ the use of narrative? How does it form our view of people and events? We’ll read nonfiction narratives on such issues as war, poverty and race. Readings will include John Hersey’s Hiroshima, Philip Gourievich’s We Wish To Inform You That Tomorrow We Will Be Killed With Our Families, and Richard Wright’s Black Boy, as well as the instructor’s The Other Side Of The River. We’ll also explore the craft, itself—and work with rigor and discipline on the art of reporting and writing story.
There will be regular writing assignments, and students will be encouraged to report and craft a narrative on an issue of interest to them. This course will be run as a seminar, so there will be an emphasis on critical class discussion, including presentations by students.

419E. African-American Literature
See ENGL 419C.

420. America as a World Phenomenon
(3-0-3) Hodson
This course considers the United States as a world phenomenon by examining how current globalization processes are prefigured in American history and how they play out in the United States today. Globalization is defined as a set of longstanding and intensifying transformative processes that include the flow of people, goods and services, capital, information, ideas, and other commodities across borders.

422. Confronting Homelessness in American Culture and Society
(3-0-3) Giamo
The purpose of this seminar is to examine the conditions of extreme poverty and homelessness within the broader context of American culture and society. In order to confront the nature of these conditions, this seminar will draw upon insights from history, literature, documentary film and photography, and the social sciences. We will focus on the degree of permanence and change in our social environment.

425. Religion and Women’s Rights
(3-0-3) Ardizzone
This course focuses on religious aspects of the women’s rights movement and women’s movements within religious communities. Focusing primarily on the Protestant, Catholic and Jewish traditions, we will examine how women have understood the relationship between their religious beliefs and their interest in expanding women’s roles. From this beginning, we will explore several historical and contemporary examples of the influence of religion on the women’s rights movement and, by the 20th century, the influence of the women’s movement in American religion.

426. Leadership and Social Responsibility
See PSY 407.

427. Jack Kerouac and the Beats
(3-0-3) Giamo
This seminar will reexamine Kerouac and his prose in relation to Beat subculture and the larger context of post-World War II American society. Although the work of other Beat writers, such as William S. Burroughs, Allen Ginsberg, and Gary Snyder will be considered, the primary focus will be on Kerouac. Moreover, the seminar will question the cultural codification of Kerouac as “King of the Beats” and advance the notion that he was a prose artist on a spiritual quest. Or, as Ginsberg aptly put it—an “American lonely Prose Trumpeter of drunken Buddha Sacred Heart.”

429. Race and Ethnicity in U.S. Media
(3-0-3) Ohmer
This course analyzes how racial and ethnic differences have been addressed in a variety of media contexts from the 1950s through today, including narrative films, talk shows, situation comedies, music videos and news. We will look at how film and television both shape and are shaped by social change and struggle, and how documentaries on race and ethnicity intersect with issues of class, gender and national identity.

430. American Spaces
(3-0-3) Schlereth
A comparative survey of the multiple histories of several natural and human-made environments created in America from the New England common to the Los Angeles freeway. Using specific cases studies, the course will analyze sites such as the Mesa Verde pueblo, Rockefeller Center, the Southern plantation, the Midwest Main Street, the Prairie style residence, the Brooklyn Bridge, New Harmony (Indiana), U.S. Route 40, the American college campus, Pullman (Illinois), the skyscraper, Spring Grove Cemetery (Cincinnati), the Victorian suburb, Grand Central Station, Golden Gate Park, Coney Island, Yosemite National Park, Chautauqua (New York), and the 1939 New York World’s Fair.

436A. Society and Culture Through Films
See ANTH 436.

437. Online America
(3-0-3) Ohmer
This seminar offers students the opportunity to explore some of the newest and most challenging forces that are reshaping American culture today: the Internet. The class will explore several issues together before focusing on individual student projects. We will read about the history of this wired medium and compare its development to that of more established technologies. Then we will examine how the Net is affecting communication and information processing in journalism, politics and corporate life, to see how this new medium changes the ways we relate to each other and learn about our social environment.

439. Advanced Reporting
(3-0-3) Colwell
Prerequisite: Completion of a writing course above freshman level and/or previous news experience. This is an advanced course in journalistic reporting and writing devoted to learning how to prepare, in a professional manner, in-depth articles on issues and events of community interest for Notre Dame and in this area. Emphasis will be on the techniques, ethics, and responsibilities of conducting interviews and research and crafting pieces for newspapers and other publications.

440. Persuasion, Commentary, Criticism
(3-0-3) Colwell
This course will consider the roles of persuasion, commentary and criticism in contemporary American culture, and will explore the techniques of these forms of expression. Following introductory sessions dealing with principles and concerns, students will prepare and discuss their own writing assignments—including opinion columns, editorials and book or performance reviews.

440A. Native Americans in Fact and Fiction
See ANTH 440.

440H. U.S. Latinos: A History
See HIST 440.

441. Literary Journalism
(3-0-3) Collins
This writing course is open by application to a few students who have shown unusual promise in other journalism courses and/or have demonstrated superior writing skills in student publications or media internships. Literary journalism is a demanding form of communication that combines fictional techniques with scrupulous adherence to fact. Students will be responsible for two to three major pieces of writing and will work closely with one another and the instructor, who is the editor emeritus of Notre Dame magazine and an experienced freelance writer.

450. Writing for Publication
(3-0-3) Collins
This course is designed to improve and extend student skills in writing non-fiction articles, with emphasis on writing for magazines. It will touch on freelancing, researching markets, understanding audience, finding salable topics, writing query letters, and working with editors. Students will be expected to write several short articles and one major one, and they will be responsible for developing a marketing plan for the long article. The instructor of this course is the editor emeritus of Notre Dame magazine.

453H. Revolutionary America
See HIST 452.

456H. United States 1900-1945
See HIST 456.
460. Politics, Policy, and the Media (3-0-3) Schmuhl
The seminar will also explore how popular communications affect the policy process and political life as well as the formation of public opinion. Although the majority of the seminar’s time will be devoted to analyzing contemporary, practical manifestations of the policy, politics, press relationships, we will also consider theoretical principles that serve as the foundation for the interplay between our democratic/republic system and our “free press.”

470H. History of the American Woman II
See HIST 470.

480. American Architecture (3-0-3) Schlereth
A course designed to examine the social factors, technological innovation and artistic impulses that have produced the American built environment, 1740-1940. Comparing several building types—the private residence, the workplace, and the public building—the seminar will explore structures and spaces as material culture evidence of American cultural, artistic, and social history.

483Z. Social Demography for U.S. Minorities
See SOC 483.

484. Material America: Creating, Collecting, Consuming (3-0-3) Schlereth
A seminar exploring how historians, archaeologists, art historians, folklorists, geographers, and cultural anthropologists use material culture as important evidence in interpreting the American historical and contemporary experience. Research fieldwork in area museums and historical agencies such as the Snite Museum, the Northern Indiana Center For History, National Studebaker Museum, and Copshaholm/Oliver Mansion will be part of the seminar.

484E. Tragedy: Shakespeare and Melville
See ENGL 482C.

486. Grecian Architecture and Furniture I
See ARCH 581.

487. Building America: Architecture, Economics, Politics (3-0-3) Schlereth
A seminar designed to examine the social and economic factors, energy and land use policies, demographic urban/suburban trends, technological innovations and artistic impulses that have produced the American built environment, 1640-1940. Comparing several building types—the private residence, the workplace, and the public building—the seminar will explore structures and spaces as material culture evidence of American domestic, real estate, political and cultural history.

498. Special Studies: Reading and Research (0-9-3) Giamo
Special Studies offers students the opportunity to pursue an independent, semester-long reading or research project under the direction of a faculty member. The subject matter of Special Studies must not be duplicated in the regular curriculum.

AMERICAN STUDIES INTERNSHIPS

AMERICAN STUDIES INTERNSHIPS
All American Studies Internships provide opportunities for practical work experiences under the supervision of a professional. Students will spend nine to twelve unpaid, supervised hours per week on the job, the hours to be arranged between the student and the “employer.” Intern candidates should so arrange their academic schedule as to allow large chunks of time for internship work, such as entire days or entire mornings.

496A. Publishing Internship (0-9-3) Collins
Apprentice training with Notre Dame magazine. Satisfactory/unsatisfactory credit only.

496B. Community Service Internship (0-9-3)
Apprentice training with community social service organizations. Satisfactory/unsatisfactory credit only.

496C. Historical Research Internship (0-9-3) Schlereth
Apprentice training in archives or museums or historical preservation with local organizations. Satisfactory/unsatisfactory credit only.

496D. News Internship (0-9-3) Schmuhl
Apprentice training with newspapers. Satisfactory/unsatisfactory credit only.

Program of Studies. The undergraduate program in anthropology is designed to help students move toward a number of possible career choices while simultaneously offering an intellectual core of understanding about human life essential to a liberal education. As a broad field of study, anthropology is basic in that it addresses fundamental questions relating to the meaning of human nature. It is comprehensive in that it deals with human life in virtually every aspect of activity ranging across the political, artistic, social, religious, psychological and economic spheres. Anthropology offers its students a well-rounded view of what it means to be human. It does this through time comparisons, examining human adaptation from remote past to the present moment; and group comparisons, examining the rich array of cultural diversities from their simplest to most complex forms. It is through the comparative perspective that students of anthropology achieve a depth of appreciation for things human that is the hallmark of the field.

Anthropology provides an excellent background for careers demanding expertise in understanding human relations, motivations and activities; for example, law, business, education, public service and medicine. Should a student aspire to a career in anthropology, the undergraduate major constitutes an important step in preparing for entrance to a graduate program.

In addition to the major, other programmatic options are available. Some students will find it advantageous to take, in addition to anthropology, a major or supplementary major in another discipline. Still other students may elect to minor in anthropology. The requirements for these options are described below. Students are welcome to come to the departmental office in 611 Flanner for further information.
Major Programs:
1. The Major. There are no prerequisites to the major. The major requires 27 hours, six of which must be in the sequence of fundamentals, either ANTH 326 (Fundamentals of Linguistic Anthropology) or ANTH 328 (Fundamentals of Social and Cultural Anthropology), and either ANTH 327 (Fundamentals of Archaeology) or ANTH 329 (Fundamentals of Human Evolution). ANTH 430 (Development of Anthropological Theory) and ANTH 495 (Advanced Seminar) are also required of all students in the major sequence. It is recommended that students take the fundamentals, ANTH 326 or 328 and ANTH 327 or 329, by the end of their junior year, whereas ANTH 430 is usually taken as a junior or senior. ANTH 495 is designed as a senior capstone seminar. The remaining 15 hours must be apportioned among various subareas as follows: Approaches and Methods (six hours); Evolutionary Perspectives and Cultural Adaptation (three hours); Area Studies (three hours); and Topics in Anthropology (three hours). Courses taken for pass-fail credit will not satisfy requirements for the major.
2. The Major with Senior Thesis. Students may elect to complete a senior thesis (see ANTH 499) for six credits in addition to the requirements for the major.
3. The Minor in Anthropology. The minor requires 15 credit hours. There are no prerequisites. Students may take either ANTH 326 or 328 and either ANTH 327 or 329 and are free to elect the remaining nine hours from among the 300- and 400-level courses in the department. Courses taken for pass-fail credit will not satisfy requirements for the minor.
4. Anthropology and the Preprofessional Program. Preprofessional students will find anthropology to be a highly relevant major.

SUBAREAS

Courses and Major Subareas of the Department. The department offers courses in four major subareas in addition to the fundamentals (ANTH 326, 327, 328, and 329), theory (ANTH 430), and capstone seminar (ANTH 495). See “The Major” on this page. Minimum required hours in each subarea are indicated in parentheses.

Course Descriptions. The following course descriptions give the number and title of each course. Lecture hours per week, laboratory and/or tutorial hours per week and credit hours per semester are enclosed within parentheses. The names of the instructors normally responsible for courses are indicated.

Courses in which graduate students may enroll and for which graduate credit may be obtained are indicated with an asterisk (*) before the course number. Special requirements are made of graduate students who enroll in these courses.

109. Introduction to Anthropology (3-0-3) Staff
This course deals with the nature of anthropology as a broad and diverse area of study. The anthropological study of humankind will be approached from the perspectives of physical anthropology, prehistory and archaeology; linguistic anthropology and sociocultural anthropology. The diversity of humankind will be explored in all its aspects from times past to the present.

180. Social Science University Seminar (3-0-3) Staff
Anthropology, the holistic study of humans and their societies and cultures, is the focus of this seminar course. Through discussion and analysis of a variety of anthropology texts, this seminar course aims to develop writing skills among first-year students while exposing them to some central problems and issues within anthropology. Adopting an approach which reflects the four-field character of anthropology, the seminar will encourage students to explore topics such as: (1) anthropology as a way of knowing; (2) anthropology as an encounter with and effort to explain human diversity; (3) an approach as a discipline which uniquely contributes to our understanding of the symbolic dimensions of human behavior and communication; (4) anthropology as a discipline which uniquely contributes to our understanding of human strategies for subsistence and survival; (5) anthropology as a discipline which uniquely contributes to our understanding of human biological and cultural origins. This course satisfies the University social science requirement.
205/305. Introduction to Human Ethology
(3-0-3) McKenna
This course explores the cultural and evolutionary origins of language, non-verbal communication, infant behavior, parenting, human aggression, sexual behavior, gender development and human courtship rituals. Each subject is examined from a cross-cultural, cross-cultural, evolutionary and developmental (including historical) perspective.

310. Health, Healing, and Culture
(3-0-3) Nordstrom, Van Hollen
Prerequisite: ANTH 109, 326, 327, 328, or 329.
Disease has been a constant companion of humanity, shaped by the culture and through human impact on the environment. All societies have responded by creating medical systems to cope with poor health. After introducing the student to the discipline of medical anthropology, the course focuses on the interaction between disease and culture and on the characteristics and functions of diverse medical systems.

321. Folklore, National Culture, Irish History
(3-0-3) Gillan
The notion of folklore emerged in the late 18th and 19th centuries. Closely associated with ideas of cultural relativism, from the romantic period on it became an important resource to national movements in search of cultural authenticity. This course will explore the idea of folklore within the history of ideas and will examine the relationships between folklore and popular culture and between folklore and modernity. It will also outline the development of folklore as an academic discipline. It will look at the Irish case in detail, from the beginnings of scholarly interest in popular culture in Ireland to the central intellectual engagement of the literary revivals in English and Irish at the end of the 19th century, leading ultimately to the institutionalization of folklore study in the Irish state.

322. Black Music, World Market
(3-0-3) Downey
Prerequisite: ANTH 109, 326, or 328.
Slavery and the coerced migration of Africans to the New World left a multitude of popular musical styles, the result both of seemingly inexhaustible musical creativity and of exchange among Black peoples (and others) on both sides of the Atlantic. This course is an examination of the diversity of Black popular musics on a global scale.

323H. Modern Mexico
(3-0-3) Beatty
This course examines the complex nation that is Mexico in the 20th century, its challenges and its prospects. Focusing primarily on the period since 1870, we will study the social, economic, political and cultural forces that have shaped the history of the United States’ southern neighbor.

324. Irish Traditional Culture
(3-0-3) Gillan
To examine Irish peasant culture, this course will focus on the materials accumulated by folklorists since the late 19th century. Folklorists recorded a huge volume of information as part of a project to rescue and rehabilitate the Gaelic tradition within a modernizing Ireland. This information was from peasant society, but was often seen as transcending it (Gramsci’s “national-popular”). The course will interrogate the notion of “traditional culture,” implicit or explicit in the work of folklorists, and will relate that work to anthropological and other writing on Ireland. The notion of traditional culture as a knowledge system will also be discussed. There will be particular emphasis on narrative traditions (stories and storytelling), popular religion (folk belief) and material culture (folklife), traditionally the core areas for researchers in folklore and folklife.

326. Fundamentals of Linguistic Anthropology
(3-0-3) Blum, Gaffney
An inquiry into the origins of language, the nature of meaning, the power of language and how language systems are acquired and variously function in culture and society.

327. Fundamentals of Archaeology
(3-0-3) Chesson, Kujit, Schurr
This course is an introduction to the methods, goals, and theoretical concepts of archaeology, with a primary focus on that practiced in the Middle East, North America, and Europe. Case studies of survey, excavation, and analytical techniques will focus on recent or ongoing investigations of archaeological sites in North America, Central America, Europe, Africa, and the Middle East.

328. Fundamentals of Social and Cultural Anthropology
(3-0-3) Gaffney, Kawano, Nordstrom, Richman, Van Hollen
This course addresses the question of how and why cultures differ, the relationship between environment and culture and how humans use culture to solve common problems while creating unique behavioral systems. Students examine the cultural nature of language, personality, religion, economics, politics, family and kinship, play and even deviant behavior.

329. Fundamentals of Human Evolution
(3-0-3) Bellis, Fuentes, McKenna, Schurr, Sheridan
This course deals with human evolution in both biological and cultural terms. Topics covered will include primate behavior, the mechanisms of evolution, the fossil record and the characteristics of prehistoric cultures.

336. Human Diversity
(3-0-3) Sheridan
Prerequisite: ANTH 327 or 329.
Issues concerning the nature of human diversity (race, intelligence, sex, gender, etc.) are a continuing source of social and scientific debate. This course is designed to present the issues and methods used by physical anthropologists to study both the biological basis of human differences, as well as the ongoing process of human adaptation and evolution in response to climate, nutrition and disease.

340. Ancient Cities and States
(3-0-3) Chesson
Archaeological evidence and fieldwork in ancient cities and their environments is examined to provide an understanding of the cultural, social, economic, political and architectural features of ancient urban centers. This course is designed to present the issues and methods used by archaeologists to study ancient urban centers.

353. Societies and Cultures of South Asia
(3-0-3) Van Hollen
This course provides a brief introduction to the history and cultures of South Asia, with a special emphasis on those of the eastern Mediterranean and the Near East. It also explores theories about how ancient civilizations rose and fell.

354. Japanese Society
(3-0-3) Kawaro
This course presents a survey of the social structures and forms of expression that make up the complex society of contemporary Japan. Drawing on a range of sources, including anthropological writings, history, reporting, film, and fiction, the course will explore the basic institutions that underlie Japanese life, including family, work settings, religious traditions, urban and rural dynamics, political and economic order, gender relations, youth, and popular culture, as well as an inquiry into recent controversies reflecting changing attitudes toward Japan’s national identity.

359. Peoples of Africa
(3-0-3) Bellis
This course is designed to provide an introduction to the societies of Sub-Saharan Africa. It examines cultures in present-day Africa as well as in the past in order to lend an understanding to the developmental processes which led to their modern forms. The importance of the relation between a culture and its physical environment is stressed.
361. Societies and Cultures of Latin America
(3-0-3) Downey
This course introduces students to the diverse cultures and societies of Latin America. Through historical, ethnographic and literary study, it explores relations of power, ideology and resistance from the colonial conquest to the present, including economic dependency, underdevelopment and development, political institutions, the churches, the military, social movements, religious expressions, and ethnic and class relations. Contemporary issues of globalization, violence and migration will preoccupy our discussion of Central and South America and the Caribbean today.

365. The Contemporary Middle East
(3-0-3) Gaffney
Surveys Islamic civilization, the most important cultural influence in the Middle East, as context for discussion of the life of Middle Eastern peoples. Topics explored include the foundations of Islam, Muslim ethics, Sunni-Shi’a split, religious pilgrimage, ethnicity, ecological adaptations, religious brotherhoods and sisterhoods, Sufism and concepts of the state.

370. Caribbean Diasporas
(3-0-3) Richman
Prerequisite: ANTH 109, 326, or 328.
The movement of money and raw materials as well as the displacement of people have long structured the Caribbean experience. This course explores the transnational orientations and the multidimensional consequences of movement from the Caribbean as it affects sites in Miami, London, Paris or Brooklyn as well as Havana, Jamaica, Haiti or Belize. Reading works of ethnography, fiction and history, questions about the construction and reconstruction of family bonds, community identity, religion, political power and economic relations will be treated in the domestic and the global context.

382. Anthropology of Gender
(3-0-3) Richman
Prerequisite: ANTH 109, 326, or 328.
This course introduces students to the main issues and debates characterizing the anthropology of gender and explores how anthropologists have attempted to understand changing roles, sexual asymmetry, and stratification. The class contrasts and compares the representation of women and men in different kinds of societies and in different political-economic contexts.

386. Religion, Myth, and Magic
(3-0-3) Gaffney, Richman
The study of religious beliefs and practices in tribal and peasant societies emphasizing myths, ritual, symbolism and magic as ways of explaining man’s place in the universe. Concepts of purity and pollution, the sacred and the profane, and types of ritual specialists and their relation to social structure will also be examined.

387E. City in Modern Chinese Fiction
(3-0-3) Lin
Examining portrayals of cities such as Beijing and Shanghai in fictional works, this course explores the image of the city as the big, the bad, and the irresistible site of desire for modernity in 20th-century China.

388E. Chinese Mosaic: Philosophy, Politics, Religion
(3-0-3) Jensen
This is a special topics class that provides an introduction to the diverse lifeways constituting the puzzle of the Chinese people. The course will chart this terrain of current Chinese imagination as it has been shaped from the contending, and often contentious, influences of religion, philosophy, and politics, introducing students to the heralded works of the Chinese intellectual tradition while requiring critical engagement with the philosophic and religious traditions animating this culture. Thus, as they learn about China, students also will reflect on how Chinese and Westerners have interpreted it.

389. Prehistory of Eastern North America
(3-0-3) Schurr
This course traces the development of a Native American culture from its earliest beginnings in North America to the time of European contact. Archaeology may provide answers as to when the American Indians first entered North America, who the Moundbuilders were, how the Native Americans invented agriculture, how they developed sophisticated societies, and why historic American Indian tribes were so diverse.

390M. Islam: Religion and Culture
(3-0-3) Afsaruddin
This course discusses the rise of Islam in the Arabian peninsula in the seventh century and its subsequent establishment as a major world religion and civilization. Lectures and readings deal with the core beliefs and institutions of Islam, with particular emphasis on religious and political thought from the Middle Ages through our own time. All readings are in English. No prerequisite.

391. Prehistory of Western North America
(3-0-3) Mack
Archaeological data and cultural life of prehistoric Western North America over the last 20,000 years will be covered. This course emphasizes origins and cultural development from an early pioneer stage to the later, sophisticated, diverse cultures of Native Americans and focuses on material cultures, environmental relationships and technology to explore cultural change, land-use patterns, economics and political complexity.

*403. Anthropology of Art
(3-0-3) Bellis
Prerequisite: ANTH 109, 326, 327, 328 or 329, or art major.
This course will examine art as a functional part of culture from an anthropological point of view. Attention is given to evolution of art as part of human culture and to evolution of the study of art by anthropologists. Open to graduate students.
404. Topics in Biological Anthropology (3-0-3) Fuentes
Prerequisite: ANTH 109, 327, or 329.
This course explores the latest developments in biological anthropology, including but not limited to population genetics, human diversity, the concept of race, primate evolution and behavior, patterns of adaptation, and evolutionary medicine. Emphasis will be on the role culture plays in the development of biological systems.

405. Biological Anthropology (3-1-4) Fuentes, Sheridan
Prerequisite: ANTH 109, 327, or 329.
This course includes research pertaining to human evolution and to epidemiological and nutritional studies both now and in the remote past, as well as the applied physical anthropology fields of forensic sciences and genetics. The course will help the undergraduate student understand the range of work possible in biological anthropology.

406. Primate Behavior (3-0-3) Fuentes, Sheridan, McKenna
Prerequisites: ANTH 109, 327, or 329.
This course will explore the similarities and differences in behavior among members of the order of Primates. Investigations of the form, function and adaptations of our closest living relatives are essential to the study of human evolution. Aspects of primate social interaction—mother/infant bonds, male/female interactions, dominance hierarchies, communication, reproductive strategies, and aberrant behaviors—will be explored in light of their relationship to human origins.

407. Human Osteology (3-1-4) Sheridan
Prerequisite: ANTH 327 or 329.
This is a lab-intensive course that explores the methods used in physical anthropology for studying individual human skeletal remains, as well as those employed to establish biocultural connections at the population level. Forensic techniques utilized in individual identification will be developed in the first third of the course.

408. Native North American Art (3-0-3) Mack
Prerequisite: ANTH 326 or 328 or ARHI 169.
Contact with Western Europeans and their art traditions beginning about A.D. 1600 and thereafter with the art traditions of Africans, Asians and South Americans modified form, technique and context of Native North American art. However, traditional forms, technique and context continued through the centuries since 1600. The perception of this art also changed. The collections of Native North American art curated at the Sinte Museum of Art exemplify the changing content, technique and context of this art. This course will allow students to work with our collections under direct supervision.

414. Transnational Societies and Cultures (3-0-3) Richman
Prerequisite: ANTH 109, 326, or 328.
This course analyzes how cultural identities and behaviors are formed in the context of global systems. Through specific case studies, students will explore how different social groups construct their cultures in interaction with other cultures and how, in so doing, these groups are both responding to and shaping global agendas. This course will expose students to different theories of globalization and discuss why the study of regional, national and international linkages has become a critical component of contemporary anthropological research.

420. Person, Self, and Body (3-0-3) Blum
Prerequisite: ANTH 109, 326 or 328.
How is the private self different from the public person, and how do these contrasts vary in different societies? How is the body valued, situated, and contested? What are the sources of conflict within a person, between persons, and with the material world? How is identity constructed from these components? This course will examine contemporary and classical theoretical works as well as ethnographic accounts of persons, selves, and bodies to address these questions. For juniors and seniors only.

*421. Religious Life in Asian Cultures (3-0-3) Kawano
Prerequisite: ANTH 109, 326 or 328.
This course examines diverse religious expressions and lives of contemporary Asian peoples from an anthropological perspective. This course explores topics such as ritual, ancestor worship, shamanism, spirit possession, divination, and festivals in changing Asian societies. Ethnographic examples will be taken from a variety of Asian societies, such as Japan, Korea, China, Malaysia, and India.

*432. Tribe, Religion, Nation in Africa (3-0-3) Gaffney
Prerequisite: ANTH 109, 326, or 328.
This course will examine the key theoretical issues in this difficult process of the formation of large, culturally heterogeneous and complex social groupings from many smaller and more homogeneous ethnic groups. Special attention will be given to the influence of religion in this process, both conceptually and institutionally. The role of Christianity and Islam as well as the influence of traditional African religions and the many efforts at their revival will be considered as major forces in the establishment and advancement of some shared notions of the ideologies of peoplehood, nationhood and the growing awareness of the need for transnational movements. Open to graduate students.

426. Ethnicity in America (3-0-3) Chrobot
Review of the theory and history of ethnicity, its policy implications for family, education, economy, religion, government and international relations; in-depth study of one ethnic group of choice.

430. Development of Anthropological Theory (3-0-3) Blum, DaMatta, Gaffney, Sanford
Prerequisite: ANTH 326 or 328. Anthropology majors only.
The material to be covered in this course includes the seminal contributions to American and European anthropological thought as these emerged in approximate chronological order. Ideas about the place of human beings in nature, the uniqueness of the human condition and the evolution of all nature dominated the intellectual ferment that gave rise to anthropology. This initial stage was followed by varied reactions to and revisions of the evolutionary scheme, including controversy over the culture concept and the inception of theoretical schools such as functionalism, historicism, materialism and structuralism, as well as the advancement of systematic field research, the primary tool in anthropological study.

431. Race, Ethnicity, and Power (3-0-3) Mahmood, Nordstrom
Prerequisite: ANTH 109, 326, or 328.
This course analyzes how cultural identities and behaviors are formed in the context of global systems. Through specific case studies, students will explore how different social groups construct their cultures in interaction with other cultures and how, in so doing, these groups are both responding to and shaping global agendas. This course will expose students to different theories of globalization and discuss why the study of regional, national and international linkages has become a critical component of contemporary anthropological research.

432. Anthropology of War and Peace (3-0-3) Mahmood, Nordstrom
Prerequisite: ANTH 109, 326, or 328.
This class will explore the human capacity for war and peace. Anthropology provides a unique perspective on violence and conflict resolution as anthropologists often go to the front lines to document the experience of war and peacebuilding firsthand. The course will explore examples of the many forms of war in the world today, from tribal conflicts through guerrilla warfare to conventional and nuclear war. It will also study societies without war and populations with innovative ideas about peace.

*435. The Brazilian Experience (3-0-3) DaMatta
Prerequisite: ANTH 109, 326, or 328.
This course will examine the key theoretical issues in this difficult process of the formation of large, culturally heterogeneous and complex social groupings from many smaller and more homogeneous ethnic groups. Special attention will be given to the influence of religion in this process, both conceptually and institutionally. The role of Christianity and Islam as well as the influence of traditional African religions and the many efforts at their revival will be considered as major forces in the establishment and advancement of some shared notions of the ideologies of peoplehood, nationhood and the growing awareness of the need for transnational movements. Open to graduate students.
436. Society and Culture Through Films
(3-0-3) DaMatta
Prerequisite: Two previous anthropology courses.
This course will deal with a variety of social issues as they are perceived, conceived, represented and understood by movies. The focus of this course will not be on cinema history, cinema structure or moviemaking processes but on how important human problems such as cultural diversity, race relations, the crafting of national identity and national heroes, urban life, class conflict, family structure, war, and values such as success, love, happiness, fairness, misfortune, destiny, honesty, faith and the like are depicted and treated by movies.

440. Native Americans in Fact and Fiction
(3-0-3) Mack
Prerequisite: ANTH 109, 326, or 328.
This course focuses on our images of Native Americans and how these images may have been shaped by popular and scientific writing and film. Using an anthropological perspective, students read fiction and factual accounts of Native Americans and their cultures, both past and present, allowing them to build a more accurate image of Native Americans. The course uses books and film to broaden the understanding of Indian stereotypes, and students will compare them to ethnographic studies which reveal much more realistically the diversity of Native American beliefs, lifestyles and material culture.

443. Latinos in American Society
(3-0-3) Cardenas
This course will examine the sociology of the Latino experience in the United States, including the historical, cultural and political foundations of Latino life. We will approach these topics comparatively; thus, attention will be given to the various experiences of a multiplicity of Latino groups in the United States.

451. Anthropology of Reproduction
(3-0-3) Van Hollen
Prerequisite: ANTH 310, 326, or 328.
This course examines how societies throughout the globe view and manage reproductive processes. The emphasis will be primarily, though not exclusively, on women's reproductive health throughout the life cycle, including puberty, pregnancy, family planning, childbirth, and menopause. This course provides a global perspective on reproduction by examining reproduction cross-culturally and looking at reproduction in the context of globalization. A key question to be debated throughout the course will be: to what extent is the biomedicalization of reproductive health occurring in a uniform way across the globe?

452. Evolutionary Medicine
(3-0-3) McKenna
Prerequisite: ANTH 205, 305, 329, 394 or 458.
This course will recontextualize a variety of human diseases, syndromes and disorders from the standpoint of evolution, in the modern cultural context. The evolution of infectious diseases, menopause, women’s reproductive cancers, allergy, pediatric topics (colic, physiologic jaundice, sleep problems, SIDS), breastfeeding, obstetrics, geriatric medicine, structural and genetic abnormalities, psychiatric disorders, psychological health, eating disorders, nutrition, obesity, myopia, emotional disorders, touch therapy and massage will be examined in the context of this exciting and emerging new field.

453P. Psychology and Medicine
(3-0-3) Kohlberg
This course has two basic objectives. First, it examines from a lifespan and psychobiological perspective the factors that place individuals at different stages of life at risk for illness and assist them in maintaining their health. In addition, it addresses a variety of challenging psychological and social issues that physicians and other healthcare professionals must face in the practice of medicine. The course covers a range of topics dealing with health issues related to different stages of human development (childhood, adolescence, and adulthood), disabled populations, culture and gender, stress, physician-patient interactions, death and dying, professional ethics, and social policies relating to health care. The course is primarily intended for students intending to enter medical school.

Most classes will involve brief formal presentations by the instructors and invited guests, followed by discussion of assigned readings pertinent to the day’s topic. In addition, students will be exposed, via a limited practicum, to a variety of medical settings.

454. Cultural Aspects of Clinical Medicine
(3-1-4) Wolosin
Permission required.
The course examines popular medical concepts and expectations patients bring with them to the clinical or hospital setting, as well as the attitudes, organization and goals of the clinical medical care. The interface between these sets of concepts and expectations is examined with regard to health care management and outcome of treatment. Students divide their time between classroom and service as patient/family liaisons in an area emergency room. Enrollment is by consent of instructor only, and limited to anthropology and premedical majors. Student access to a car is necessary. Open only to juniors and seniors.

458. Infancy: Evolution, History, and Development
(3-0-3) McKenna
Prerequisite: Senior majors and minors only.
This course explores aspects of infant biology and socio-emotional development in relationship to Western child care practices and parenting. Western pediatric approaches to infancy and parenting are evaluated in light of Western cultural history and cross-cultural, human evolutionary and developmental data. A variety of mammals are included as a comparative background to explore the relationships between infant physiology, mental and physical health and contemporary infant caregiving concepts.

463. Gender and Power in Asian Cultures
(3-0-3) Kawana
Prerequisite: ANTH 109, 326 or 328.
The class studies the representations of women and men in different Asian societies and in different political, social, and economic contexts, and their affect on kinship, family, work, religion, and the state. Ethnographic studies will cover Japan, Korea, China, Malaysia, Indonesia, and India, with a special emphasis on contemporary Japan.

464P. Child Development and Family Conflict
(3-0-3) Cummings
This course provides an overview of the power structure and culture of Mexican society with special attention to the various ways power has been displayed and exercised. It will start with some historical antecedents of Mexico such as the nature of the Spanish conquest and the Colonial period, and the influence of pre-conquest cultures on contemporary Mexico. It will follow with selected topics such as kinship structure, rural-urban migration, urbanization and industrialization, the rise of the middle class, and the role of the state in those processes of modernization. Taking an anthropological perspective on political culture, it will also examine recent conflicts arising in various sectors, while assessing the key factors that underlie the economic and social differences between the privileged, the marginal and those in the middle.

468. Household Archaeology
(3-0-3) Chessen
Prerequisite: ANTH 327, 329, 340, or 389.
This course explores the theoretical and methodological challenges faced by archaeologists excavating ancient households, one of the most common contexts encountered in archaeological excavations throughout the world. Students will explore topics which include the social, economic, political and physical characteristics of households, the relationship between households and communities, and the contribution of household archaeology to architectural, artifactual, and social analyses of ancient communities.
470. Engendering Archaeology
(3-0-3) Chesson
Prerequisite: ANTH 327, 329, 340, or 389.
This course will consider the historical and theoretical foundations of creating an engendered past, the methodological and practical aspects of “doing” engendered archaeology, and the intersection between political feminism, archaeological knowledge production, and the politics of an engendered archaeology.

472. Theory and Method in Archaeology
(3-0-3) Bellis, Chesson
Prerequisite: ANTH 327, 329 or 488.
Archaeology is not a discipline but a methodological approach to an understanding of the human condition which relies on an analysis of the material culture remains of a society. Many different disciplines (e.g., anthropology, history, theology, classics and art history) use the method, and the course may be found useful for individuals from any of these disciplines who may have an interest in archaeological problems in their own field of study. The practice of archaeological research will be covered, from the various methods of identifying sites in the field, to excavation procedures, to analysis of material in the laboratory.

473. The Archaeology of Death
(3-0-3) Schurr
Prerequisite: ANTH 327 or 329.
Our species is unique because it is the only species that deliberately buries its dead. Mortuary analysis (the study of burial patterns) is a powerful approach that archaeologists use for the study of prehistoric social organization and ideology. This course explores the significance of prehistoric human mortuary behavior, from the first evidence of deliberate burial by Neanderthals as an indicator of the evolution of symbolic thought, to the analysis of the sometimes spectacular burial patterns found in the complex societies such as ancient Egypt and Megalithic Europe. Open to graduate students.

474. Environmental Archaeology
(3-0-3) Schurr
Prerequisite: ANTH 109, 327, 329, or 389.
This course explores the relationships between past societies and the ecosystems they inhabited and constructed. It will show how archaeologists investigate the relations between past societies and their environments using concepts from settlement archaeology, human geography, and paleoecology (the study of ancient ecosystems).

475. Archaeological Materials Analysis: Lithic Technology
(3-1-4) Kuijt
Prerequisite: ANTH 109, 327, 329, or 389.
The course will cover laboratory procedures and techniques used in the analysis of a range of excavated chipped stone artifacts from prehistoric contexts. Major lecture topics will include procurement and production of stone tools, typology, debitage analysis, style, ethnicity, and experimental technology. Students will gain familiarity with these topics in a laboratory context by participating in flintknapping practice and working intensively with several archaeological collections.

477. The Forager/Farmer Transition
(3-0-3) Kuijt
Prerequisite: ANTH 109, 327, 329, or 389.
The course explores the transition from hunting and gathering ways of life to agricultural societies and systems of food production in the Old and New Worlds. This course examines the origins of food production in diverse areas as a long-term social, conceptual and economic process.

479H. History of Chinese Medicine
(3-0-3) Murray
In light of the contemporary currency of certain Chinese practices in the field of alternative medicine, this course will explore the phenomenon of Chinese traditional medicine in both its historical and contemporary settings. The first unit, Medicine in Ancient China, will explore the earliest medical ideas of the Chinese and will demonstrate how the state’s political unification gave rise to a correlative cosmology that not only included Heaven and Earth, but also human beings as integral elements of an organic cosmos. The second unit will explore the influences and contributions of Taoism (Daoism) and Buddhism to Chinese medicine and will explore what it meant to be both physicians and patients in late imperial China. The third unit will focus on medicine in contemporary China and will feature the experiences of Elisabeth Hsu, a student of Chinese medical anthropology who as a part of her doctoral research enrolled as a student in Yunnan Traditional Chinese Medical College between September 1988 and December 1989. We will conclude the course with a brief examination of the influence of Chinese medicine on the contemporary world.

482. Archaeology of Ireland
(3-0-3) Kuijt
Prerequisite: Permission required.
This course examines the cultural and historical trajectory of the archaeology of Ireland from the Neolithic through the Viking period. Topics include the emergence of the unique systems of communities, the development of systems of metallurgy in the Iron Age, regionalism, mortuary practices and ritual, and discussion of village life in ring forts during the Bronze Age.

483. Social Demography of U.S. Minorities
(3-0-3) Garcia
This course will focus on the demographic status of ethnic minorities in the United States. Some of the major topics include population size and projections, geographical distribution, and residential patterns. Other issues are educational attainment, occupational status, and personal and family income. The course will cover the basics of demographic methods and techniques.

484. Museum Anthropology: An Introduction
(3-0-3) Mack
Prerequisite: ANTH 326, 327, or 328.
An introduction to the history, philosophy, and professional practices of museums. It includes an examination of the ethical and practical issues of museum work through readings, discussions, and hands-on experience. Emphasis is on the role of anthropologists in museums and the exhibition of non-Western European art.

486. Mother-Baby Behavioral Sleep Laboratory
(1-2-3) McKenna
Prerequisite: ANTH 205, 305 or 394. Permission required.
This course examines the sleeping arrangements of infants and children, nighttime nurturing patterns by parents, and the cultural values and ideologies that underlie them. The focus will center largely on American and European societies. Research will be conducted in a sleep laboratory on the sleep behavior of mothers, fathers and children from the local community.

495. Advanced Seminar
(3-0-3) Various
Prerequisite: ANTH 430.
This course will provide an opportunity for students to apply theoretical knowledge and critical thinking skills that they have acquired in their anthropology courses, especially ANTH 430, which is a prerequisite. The course is designed to be a capstone requirement to the anthropology major. A research paper will be completed by the end of the course. This course may be used as the first semester of the two semester senior thesis sequence.

497A. Directed Readings in Archaeology
(V-V-V) Bellis, Chesson, Kuijt, Mack, Schurr
Prerequisites: Junior or senior standing, dean’s list, consent of instructor.
Intensive independent readings on a special problem area in archaeology about which the student will be expected to produce a detailed annotated bibliography and write a scholarly paper.

497B. Directed Readings in Biological Anthropology
(V-V-V) Fuentes, McKenna, Sheridan
Prerequisites: Junior or senior standing, dean’s list, consent of instructor.
Intensive independent readings on a special problem area in biological anthropology about which the student will be expected to produce a detailed annotated bibliography and write a scholarly paper.
497C. Directed Readings in Sociocultural Anthropology (V-V-V-V) Blum, DaMatta, Downey, Gaffney, Kawano, Mack, Mahmood, Nordstrom, Richman, Sanford, Van Hollen
Prerequisites: Junior or senior standing, dean’s list, consent of instructor.
Intensive independent readings on a special problem area in sociocultural anthropology about which the student will be expected to produce a detailed annotated bibliography and write a scholarly paper.

497D. Directed Readings in Bioarchaeology (V-V-V) Schurr, Sheridan
Prerequisites: Junior or senior standing, dean’s list, consent of instructor.
Intensive independent readings on a special problem area in biological anthropology and/or archaeology about which the student will be expected to produce a detailed annotated bibliography and write a scholarly paper.

498A. Directed Research in Archaeology (V-V-V) Bellis, Chesson, Kuijt, Mack, Schurr
Prerequisites: Junior or senior standing, dean’s list, consent of instructor.
Intensive independent research on a special problem area in archaeology about which the student will be expected to produce a detailed annotated bibliography and write a scholarly paper.

498B. Directed Research in Biological Anthropology (V-V-V) Fuentes, McKenna, Sheridan
Prerequisites: Junior or senior standing, dean’s list, consent of instructor.
Intensive independent research on a special problem area in biological anthropology about which the student will be expected to produce a detailed annotated bibliography and write a scholarly paper.

498C. Directed Research in Sociocultural Anthropology (V-V-V-V) Blum, DaMatta, Downey, Gaffney, Kawano, Mack, Mahmood, Nordstrom, Richman, Sanford, Van Hollen
Prerequisites: Junior or senior standing, dean’s list, consent of instructor.
Intensive independent research on a special problem area in sociocultural anthropology about which the student will be expected to produce a detailed annotated bibliography and write a scholarly paper.

498D. Directed Research in Bioarchaeology (V-V-V) Schurr, Sheridan
Prerequisites: Junior or senior standing, dean’s list, consent of instructor.
Intensive independent research on a special problem area in biological anthropology and/or archaeology about which the student will be expected to produce a detailed annotated bibliography and write a scholarly paper.

498E. Directed Research Sleep Lab (V-V-V) McKenna
Prerequisites: Junior or senior standing, dean’s list, consent of instructor.
Intensive independent research at the Mother-Baby Behavioral Sleep Laboratory about which the student will be expected to produce a detailed annotated bibliography and write a scholarly paper.

499. Anthropology Senior Thesis (V-V-V) Various
Prerequisites: Senior standing, dean’s list, consent of instructor.
This course, which continues for two semesters, provides the student with the opportunity for independent study and the development of skills in research and writing during the senior year of undergraduate study. The effort is the student’s own, from the choosing of a topic to the conclusion presented in the final paper. A thesis director is chosen to guide the student and provide assistance.

The Department. The Department of Art, Art History, and Design at the University of Notre Dame, as part of the College of Arts and Letters, is dedicated to the liberal education of the whole person. The art and design student, guided by an active faculty, can expect to become critically aware of the rich artistic past and challenged to become a thoughtful maker of contemporary visual expression. The art history student, under the tutelage of an expert faculty, will achieve a broad and evaluative knowledge of the art of the Western world. An active lecture and visiting artist series and the extensive collections of the Snite Museum of Art strengthen and broaden the work in the classroom and studio. The South Bend and Chicago area provide additional cultural activities and experiences.

The department has 14 visual art and design and seven art history faculty. The student may pursue one of three degrees at the undergraduate level: the bachelor of arts (B.A.) in studio art and design or a B.A. in art history, or the bachelor of fine arts (B.F.A.) in studio art and design. Studio concentrations are offered in ceramics, design, painting, photography, printmaking and sculpture. The size of the department enables the serious student to receive a solid foundation and, through personal contact with the faculty, to develop a creative individual direction in a discipline. The department is further enriched by an active graduate program offering the M.F.A. degree in studio art and design and the M.A. degree in art history.
ART, ART HISTORY, AND DESIGN

The art history classrooms, slide library and faculty offices are housed on the first floor of O’Shaughnessy Hall near the central department office. Riley Hall houses all the visual arts activities in well-equipped studios that are always available for student use; faculty studios and the Isis Gallery are also in Riley Hall. Skilled technical staff and support facilities are available as appropriate for each medium that is offered.

THE STUDIO ART AND DESIGN MAJOR

Bachelor of Arts Degree in Studio Art and Design

The Bachelor of Arts degree program in art and design is defined as a general liberal arts degree. The B.A. degree is ideal for the student who desires a liberal education with a strong emphasis in art. Students enrolling in the B.A. degree program are required to complete a five-course core curriculum during their first three semesters. These courses are: Drawing I, 2-D Foundations, 3-D Foundations, Art Traditions I and Art Traditions II. Students are not required to select a major concentration for the B.A. degree, but some focus of study is encouraged. The B.A. degree consists of 36 hours in art and design, of which 27 are in studio and nine in art history.

Bachelor of Fine Arts Degree in Studio Art and Design

The bachelor of fine arts degree program in art and design is intended for the student who wishes to pursue a professional career in the visual arts. The program is organized into a four-year sequence of study that provides a solid understanding of art and art history. The student has an opportunity to explore a variety of curricular options and then chooses an intensive and professional major concentration. In addition to a primary concentration, B.F.A. students are encouraged to select a secondary area of interest to broaden their thinking and to enrich their creative study. B.F.A. candidates share a close working relationship with the department’s faculty who are active professional artists and designers. Intensive studio work is complemented by an academic education with strong art history and liberal arts component. The B.F.A. degree consists of 66 credit hours in art, of which 54 are in studio and 12 in art history.

B.F.A. Freshman and Sophomore Years

Students beginning in the program are required to complete a seven-course studio core curriculum during their first two years. Five of these courses are mandated: Drawing I, Figure Drawing, 2-D Foundations, 3-D Foundations and Photography I. The remaining two studio courses are optional, based on the student’s interest. This intensive curriculum establishes a base for the studio practices and principles for all visual art expression. At the end of the fourth semester, students who have earned a minimum 3.25 grade point average in their studio core courses will be accepted as candidates for the B.F.A. degree. Students who do not qualify are eligible for the B.A. degree. B.F.A. candidates are waived from the second History/Social Science requirement and the University Fine Arts requirement.

B.F.A. Junior and Senior Years

Students accepted into the B.F.A. program begin a two-year primary concentration in one of the following studio areas: ceramics, design, painting, photography, printmaking or sculpture. The concentration requires 15 hours of study in a major concentration area during the last four semesters. Teaching in the major is highly individualized and stresses the creative development and preparation of the student for the professional world. In addition to pursuing a concentration, all B.F.A. majors must enroll in the B.F.A. Seminar and the Senior Thesis Course. The culmination of the B.F.A. degree is the completion of a senior thesis. This two-semester senior project, directed by a faculty member, will be exhibited and approved by the faculty as a requirement for graduation.

STUDIO ART AND DESIGN CONCENTRATIONS

Ceramics Concentration

Ceramics is a concentration emphasizing clay as the primary vehicle for expression. Pottery, vessel making and sculpture may be addressed through a variety of processes to include hand-building, throwing and casting. As students develop technical skill with the medium, they will create and explore forms and ideas of their own choosing. Beyond clay, students will be encouraged to study and utilize other sculptural media as well as become familiar with contemporary and historical source material which will inform their own direction in ceramics.

Design Concentration

The design program offers courses in graphic design, product design and digital design. These three disciplines can overlap, creating a unique design educational offering.

Graphic Design

Graphic Design is concerned with issues in visual communication through an understanding of the use of symbols, typography and images. Courses concentrate on the conceptual development and craft involved in the design of various types of communication projects. The graphic designer has a profound influence on the visual style of today’s society. Everything published in every media, from print to video, is the potential domain of the designer. It is therefore a concern of the program to be sensitive to the designer’s ethical role in society. Design need not only concern itself with commerce but can also serve society by playing a key role in the positive communication of ideas.

Product Design

Product Design strives to give society the best products within the context of a specific industry. The product designer is concerned with human needs as well as with the function and appearance of the product. In this sense, the contemporary designer influences the aesthetic and human consciousness of industry. The introductory studio courses emphasize a pragmatic/technical problem-solving methodology. The design student learns skills in visual sensitivity and gains experience with a variety of materials, methods of construction, mechanisms and surfaces that are currently available to designers for manufactured objects. Upper-level design studios stress the importance of conveying reason, justification and content to design. The program aims to address cultural, social and technological concerns through progressive and communicative solutions. Emphasis is placed on design interaction throughout the art and design studios. Students are encouraged to establish a meaningful theme throughout their work.

Digital Design

Digital Design is an introduction to the technology that has redefined the design field. Understanding this technology and its non-linear-based form is imperative in today’s design education. Digital imagemaking focuses on various ways of assembling image, from video capture, scanners, computer programming and graphic software. Upper-level classes explore the presentation of information by nontraditional methods such as the Internet, hypertext, CD-ROM and information kiosks.

By combining the advantages of this technology with a foundation in graphic and/or product design, the student will establish a sensitivity and thorough working platform from which to enter the world of the professional designer.
The design faculty at Notre Dame are professionals in their fields. Their diverse experiences, as well as their commitment to quality design education, complement an atmosphere for creative learning and problem solving. The faculty’s range of qualifications extend internationally to include Eastern and Western Europe, into the corporate realm as design managers, design and manufacturing entrepreneurs, professional design consultants and experts in digital design technologies. These credentials present the students with a rich complement of educational resources plus a professional base in which to network, both nationally and internationally.

Painting Concentration

Painting is a traditional visual expression of human experience that combines the direct manipulation of materials with an illusion of the world in space. Paintings can report what the eye sees as well as what the eye might see; it is fact and fantasy. A painting can also stimulate and delight the consciousness with formulations of colored pastes on a flat surface. The concentration in painting exposes students to the varied traditions of the medium and encourages them to explore their own capacity to create. Emphasis is placed on discovering the student’s individual values and developing techniques that elucidate and clarify those values.

Photography Concentration

Photographs mediate our experiences with the physical world experiences that take place at the intersection between art, culture and our own individual perceptions. The concentration in photography is designed to inform students of photographic traditions while engaging them in issues of contemporary art practice. The photography program seeks to facilitate growth and development of the art student through a full range of courses dealing with technical, historical, critical and aesthetic concerns. The goal of the program is to enable students to be conversant with these issues and to recognize the power of photography as a uniquely flexible medium for both personal and cultural expression.

Printmaking Concentration

The printmaking concentration emphasizes a manner of thinking and making images that printmaking techniques allow and encourage. As students become familiar with the various techniques and technologies of lithography, intaglio, relief and silkscreen, they learn methods of developing images and ideas. Experimentation and exploration of mixed print media images are encouraged. The courses are designed to progressively develop skill, creativity, personal imagery and knowledge of relevant current issues. Advanced students are encouraged to work on a professional level by creating a cohesive body of work and by striving toward exhibiting that work.

Sculpture Concentration

The goal of the sculpture program is to offer students a solid understanding of sculptural materials, tools and techniques which will enable them to expand their ideas into skillful and thoughtful individual expression. Students work in well-equipped studios under the direction of the sculpture faculty. A full range of sculptural experiences in traditional and nontraditional media are available in specific courses. Independent study, visiting artist lectures and visits to area museums and galleries supplement course offerings. By blending required and elective courses, students may design a curriculum that will respond to their particular needs and direction.

Art Studio Courses

121S-122S. Basic Drawing
(0-6-3) (0-6-3)
Open to all students.
This course deals with form depiction in its many aspects and modes and is intended for beginning students as well as advanced students who need additional experience in drawing.

133S-134S. Basic Painting
(0-6-3) (0-6-3)
Open to all students.
This course is an introduction to oil painting techniques and to stretcher and canvas preparation. The emphasis is on finding a personal direction.

149S. 3-D Foundations
(0-6-3) (0-6-3)
This required core course for all art majors introduces the student to three-dimensional art by producing sculptures (both figurative and abstract) in a variety of media. Contemporary movements in sculpture are examined through slide lectures and attendance at visiting artist lectures and visits to exhibitions.

209S-210S. Ceramics I
(0-6-3) (0-6-3)
This course examines basic techniques of wheel-thrown and hand-built clay structures for sculpture and pottery.

231S-232S. Watercolor I
(0-6-3) (0-6-3)
Open to all students.
This course is an introduction to the watercolor medium and deals with a variety of methods, materials and techniques (both realistic and abstract) with special emphasis on color and composition.
241S-242S. Wood Sculpture
(0-6-3) (0-6-3)
Open to all students.
This course uses wood as a primary medium. Emphasis is placed on individual concept and design. Students learn the use of hand and power tools as well as techniques of joining, laminating, fabricating and carving.

243S-443S. Metal Foundry
(0-6-3) (0-6-3)
Open to all students.
This course focuses on work in fabricated and welded steel and cast bronze sculptures. Students learn basic welding techniques using oxygen and acetylene, and arc and electric welding. Moldmaking, working in wax, and metal finishing techniques are also explored.

245S-246S. Metal Sculpture I
(0-6-3) (0-6-3)
Open to all students.
Metal is the medium of choice in this course designed to explore three-dimensional design with a variety of projects grounded in historical precedents. Students become familiar with as many metalworking techniques as time and safety allow, such as gas as and arc welding, basic forge work, and several methods of piercing, cutting and alternative joining.

247S-248S. Figure Sculpture
(0-6-3) (0-6-3)
Open to all students.
This course concentrates on modeling from the figure. Work is predominantly in clay, but moldmaking and casting techniques are also explored.

285S. Photography I
(0-6-3) (0-6-3)
Open to all students.
This course is designed to broaden the context of photography I. The emphasis is placed on the student developing his or her own vision and its expression.

(0-6-3) (0-6-3)
Prerequisite: Photography I.
This course extends and develops the skills and concepts initiated in Photography I. Students are also introduced to a variety of photographic possibilities outside traditional black-and-white printing. Techniques explored include darkroom manipulations, photo-constructions, Polaroid transfers, installations and non-silver processes. Projects encourage students to continue defining their own areas of interest and to locate their own concerns within the broad range of photographic issues.

291S-292S. Etching I
(0-6-3) (0-6-3)
Open to all students.
This basic studio class introduces techniques of etching. Students learn basic plate making and printing techniques while learning to incorporate their own drawing skills and points of view. Historical and contemporary prints are reviewed.

293S. Lithography
(0-6-3) (0-6-3)
Open to all students.
This course is an introduction to planographic print techniques including drawing, painting, and photographic transfer on stone and metal plate. Basic black-and-white and color printing techniques are practiced. Contemporary and historical prints are reviewed. Emphasis is on development of the student’s own ideas and methodology.

294S. Photolithography
(0-6-3) (0-6-3)
Photolithography is a method of printmaking utilizing a metal plate that is photosensitive. Hand-drawn and computer-generated images as well as traditional photographs are used to create prints that reflect an individual’s creativity. Emphasis is placed on the student developing his or her own vision.

295S. Advanced Sculpture
(0-6-3) (0-6-3)
Prerequisites: 3-D Foundations, Wood Sculpture or Metal Sculpture.
This course allows students to work in one or a combination of the following media: clay, metal, wood, plaster, resin, or concrete. Students are encouraged to develop an individual direction.
ART, ART HISTORY, AND DESIGN

409S-410S. Ceramics Studio
(0-6-V) (0-6-V)
Prerequisites: Ceramics I and II.
This advanced course is for students pursuing an individual direction in ceramics. Emphasis is on individual concepts and techniques.

433S. Painting Studio
(0-6-V)
Permission required.
This course is designed to developing personal painting directions (oil/ acrylic). Students gain experience in criticism and in exhibition techniques.

449S-450S. Sculpture Studio
(0-6-V) (0-6-V)
Prerequisites: 3-D Foundations, Wood Sculpture or Sculpture Studio.
This advanced sculpture course offers serious students an opportunity to pursue a sculptural direction and to carry that direction to a professional level of competence. It also develops the student’s awareness of definitions and criticism of sculpture. The work may be done in any three-dimensional medium.

476S. Advanced Photography
(0-6-3)
Prerequisite: Color Photography or Photography II.
This is an advanced photography course that allows students to explore their own areas of interest while learning about a broad range of contemporary photographic issues. Students may work in any photo medium (black-and-white, color, digital, etc.) they choose. Emphasis is on creating a portfolio of images.

480S. Digital Photography
(3-3-3)
Permission required.
This course explores the use of computers for creative imagemaking. Students are introduced to the practices and procedures of digital imaging with an emphasis on exploring their own personal work.

485S. Studio Photography
(0-6-3)
Prerequisites: Photography I and Photography II or Color Photography I.
This course introduces the student to the fundamentals of studio photography. Included are lighting skills and the basics of large-format cameras. The course serves as an introduction to both commercial illustration and methods for personal work with the view camera.

491S-492S. Printmaking Studio—Etching
(0-6-V) (0-6-V)
Permission required.
This course offers advanced experience in printmaking. The emphasis is on developing personal imagery and techniques.

493S-494S. Printmaking Studio—Lithography
(0-6-V) (0-6-V)
Permission required.
This course offers advanced experience in mixed print media printmaking. The emphasis is on developing personal imagery and techniques.

495S. Topics in Photography
(0-6-3)
Permission required.
This is a topics course for advanced photography students. Students are engaged in critical issues involving contemporary studio practice through slide lectures, discussions, visiting artist interviews, gallery visits and student presentations. Directed readings and critical writings will be assigned during the semester. Students will concurrently develop a creative project.

498. Special Studies
(0-3-V)
Permission required.
Independent study in art studio: directed readings, research or creative projects. Open to qualified seniors with permission of the instructor.

499S. B.F.A. Thesis
(0-6-3)
Prerequisite: B.F.A. candidacy.
The B.F.A. Thesis is defined by an independent thesis project, continuing for two semesters during the senior year. The B.F.A. Thesis is a personal visual statement that is the culmination of a student’s collective development within the department. The B.F.A. Thesis can be the extension of an ongoing body of work or a defining project. The thesis project is supported by a written statement defining the project, which is due at the end of the first semester. The thesis project culminates in the second semester with a B.F.A. Thesis Exhibition. The B.F.A. Thesis student signs up with a faculty member working in the student’s area of interest, who serves as an advisor for the thesis project.

DESKTOP DESIGN COURSES

111S. 2-D Foundations
(0-6-3)
Art majors only.
This course deals with fundamentals of two-dimensional design and is intended for students entering studio practice for the first time. The course is also open to more advanced students who wish to increase their knowledge of the elements and principles of design. The course is project-oriented. Studio practice in the basic principles of design employing color theory, form and space organization, as well as materials and processes used in the design process, are emphasized.

217S. Visual Dialogue
(0-6-3)
Open to all students.
Emphasis is placed on developing a sensitive visual thinking process and acquiring drawing skills essential to both Product Design and Graphic Design. The course is intended for students entering studio practice for the first time as well as for advanced students who wish to deepen their visualization and illustration skills.

218S. Product Design I
(0-6-3)
This foundation 3-D design studio begins as a natural extension of Basic Design. Students are encouraged to think and work in three-dimensional media. A series of fundamental design problems are assigned during the course of the semester. Emphasis is placed on the transformation of imagination from mind to paper to model.

281S. Graphic Design I
(0-6-3)
Prerequisite: 2-D Foundations.
This is an introductory course in the use of materials and processes related to the production of graphic media. Laboratory applications in typography, photographic processes, and printing technology are utilized in the development of student-designed projects.

314S. Digital 3-D
(0-6-3)
Permission required.
This course introduces students to sophisticated, complex three- and four-dimensional computer software for designing objects and images and animated graphic sequences. In this digital exploration, computer technology will be used to generate, modify and present design ideas. An intense session of CAD instruction for technical documentation will be included.

316S. Graphic Design — Brands
(3-0-3)
Open to sophomores and juniors.
This course focuses on creative projects in advertising campaigns employed in the demand creation strategies for brands and services.

317S. Product Design II — Materials and Processes
(0-6-3)
Prerequisites: Visual Dialogue, Introduction to Product Design.
This course exposes Art and Art Design students to common low- and high-production manufacturing processes. Students use these methods to execute their own original designs. Students are introduced to plastic thermoforming, injection molding, sheet and profile extrusion, blow-molding, rotational molding, reaction-injection molding, and open mold laminating. Metal processes include roll forming, foundry sand casting, die casting, extrusion, stamping, anodizing and plating.
318S. Product Design III
Prerequisite: Product Design II.
This Design Research Studio challenges the advanced student with problems requiring a combination of skills. Investigation leads to an identification of needs. Final proposals will demonstrate concern for human factors, knowledge of material and process and a sensitivity of form. Presentations typically include project documentation, conceptual information, control drawings, renderings, and finished presentation models. National and regional industry-sponsored projects are employed on occasion.

330S. Furniture I
(0-6-5)
Open to all students.
In this course, students gain an understanding of the design and construction of furniture. Lectures and demonstrations expose students to the history of furniture, basic woodworking techniques, and the use of woodworking tools and equipment. Students construct full-scale furniture of their original design.

415S. Graphic Design II
(0-6-3)
Prerequisite: Graphic Design I.
This advanced course in Visual Communication is for students interested in the layout and production of advertising campaigns, corporate identity, and packaging.

416S. Graphic Design III
(0-6-3)
Prerequisite: Graphic Design II.
This advanced course in Visual Communication is for students interested in the layout and production of advertising campaigns, corporate identity, and packaging.

417S. I.D. Research Project
(0-6-3)
Prerequisite: Product Design II.
This advanced-level studio is directed toward the product design student who is preparing to enter either graduate school or professional practice. Fulfillment of this studio requires the completion of one research and design project. In addition, portfolios and resumes are prepared. Emphasis is placed on knowledge, analytical skills, logic, creativity, and excellence in visualization.

418S. Product Design V
Prerequisite: Product Design IV.
This advanced-level studio is directed toward the product design student who is preparing to enter either graduate school or professional practice. Fulfillment of this studio requires the completion of one research and design project. In addition, portfolios and resumes are prepared. Emphasis is placed on knowledge, analytical skills, logic, creativity, excellence in visualization and modeling skills, as well as on oral presentation skills.

430S. Furniture Design Studio
(0-6-3)
Open to all students.
This course offers advanced students an opportunity to develop a personal direction, using wood as a material of expression.

481S-482S. Multimedia Design
(0-6-3) (0-6-3)
Permission required.
This advanced digital imagemaking course gives the students an opportunity to pursue research and development in an advanced area of technology. In some semesters, a topic is announced as a focus for the course, such as PostScript programming or hypermedia design.

496. Design Internship
(V-V-V) Down
Permission required.
This course provides an opportunity for the design student to earn credit at an approved design office.

498. Special Studies
(0-0-V-V) (0-0-V-V)
Permission required.
Independent study in design.

499S. B.F.A. Thesis
(0-6-3)
Prerequisite: B.F.A. candidacy.
The B.F.A. Thesis is defined by an independent thesis project, continuing for two semesters during the senior year. The B.F.A. Thesis is a personal visual statement that is the culmination of a student’s collective development within the department. The B.F.A. Thesis can be the extension of an ongoing body of work or a defining project. The thesis project is supported by a written statement defining the project, due at the end of the first senior semester, and is represented in the second senior semester with a B.F.A. Thesis Exhibition. The B.F.A. Thesis student will sign up with a faculty member, working in the student’s area of interest, to serve as an advisor for the thesis project course.

THE ART HISTORY MAJOR

The bachelor of arts degree program in art history is a 30-credit-hour major. An art history major should strive to achieve a broad knowledge of the development of the art of the Western world. Majors are required to take Art Traditions I and II (six credit hours) and the Art History Methods seminar (three credit hours). In addition, the department offers courses in four areas of Western art: ancient, medieval, Renaissance and baroque, and modern (19th and 20th centuries). An art history major must take at least one course in each of these areas (12 credit hours). The remaining nine credit hours can be taken in any period. The sequence in which the area and elective courses are taken is left to the discretion of the individual student. The Art History Methods seminar should be taken in the senior year. Majors are also encouraged to take six elective hours of studio or design courses.

All 400-level art history courses include an intensive writing component for art history majors. In addition, all majors are required to write a research paper in the context of their fulfillment of the required course in art history methods (ARHI 496).

Students with a first major in another department can complete a second major in art history by taking Art Traditions I and II, the Art History Methods seminar, one course in each of the four departmental areas, and one optional art history course (24 credit hours total).

Students wishing to minor in art history can do so by taking five art history courses, typically Art Traditions I and II and three additional 400-level courses (15 credit hours total).

Courses taken for the second major or the minor cannot be counted in more than one University program, with the exception of undergraduate majors in studio art or design.

Course Descriptions. The following course descriptions give the number and title of each course. Lecture hours per week, laboratory and/or tutorial hours per week, and credits each semester are in parentheses. “V” indicates variable. Prerequisites, if any, are also given. Most of the following courses are offered at least once over a three-year period. Be sure to consult the course elective booklet published by the department each semester for particular offerings.

180. Fine Arts University Seminar: Topics in Art History
(3-0-3)
University seminars will address a variety of topics in the history of art depending on the interests of the professor. Topics which have been treated in the past in the context of this course are visual narrative and biography, the art of Andy Warhol and the language of art. These courses require several short papers as well as a final written exercise appropriate to the material.

230. Survey of Medieval Art
(3-0-3)
Open to all students.
This course will provide an introduction to the visual arts of the period c. A.D. 300 to c. A.D. 1300. In the course of the semester, we shall devote much time to considering the possibility of a history of Medieval art, as the objects and practices of the Middle Ages will be shown to make our assumptions about the nature of art history problematic. Working from individual objects and texts we will construct a series of narratives that will attend to the varieties of artistic practices available to the Middle Ages. From these, it will be shown that art was a vital, complex, lucid and formative element in the societies and cultures, both secular and sacred, that shaped this period.
311. Pre-Columbian Art: The Olmec and Their Legacy: 1500 B.C. – A.D. 1500
(3-0-3)
Open to all students.
The Olmec civilization was the mother culture of Mesoamerica, and beginning in 1500 B.C. It forged the template of pre-Columbian cultural development for the next 3,000 years. This course will introduce the student to the Mesoamerican worldview by tracing the origins of Mexican art, religion and culture from the development of the Olmec civilization up to Aztec times. Each week’s classes will consist of a thorough examination of the iconography and function of art objects through slide lectures, as well as hands on, in-depth study of individual pieces of sculpture. Special emphasis will be placed upon the essential unity of religious concepts as iconography evolved over this 3,000-year time span. This will be an object-oriented course. Students will be called upon to reason logically, voice opinions, and make aesthetic judgments. A good visual memory is helpful.

312. Survey of Greek Art and Architecture
(3-0-3)
Open to all students.
This course analyzes and traces the development of Greek architecture, painting, and sculpture in the historical period from the eighth through second century B.C., with some consideration of prehistoric Greek forebears of the Mycenaean Age. Particular emphasis is placed upon monumental art, its historical and cultural contexts, and how it reflects changing attitudes toward the gods, human achievement, and the relationship between the divine and the human.

324. Etruscan and Roman Art and Architecture
(3-0-3)
Open to all students.
Roman art of the Republic and Empire is one focus of this course, but other early cultures of the Italian peninsula and their rich artistic production are also considered. In particular, the arts of the Villanovans and the Etruscans are examined and evaluated as both unique expressions of discrete cultures and as ancestors of and influence on Rome. The origins and development of monumental architecture, painting, portraiture and historical relief sculpture are isolated and traced from the early first millennium B.C. through the early fourth century of the modern era.
333. Byzantine Art
(3-0-3)
Open to all students.
Byzantine art has often been opposed to the traditions of Western naturalism and, as such, has been an undervalued or little known adjunct to the story of Medieval art. To develop a more sophisticated understanding of this material, we will examine the art produced in Byzantium in the period from the ninth to the 12th century, a period that marks the high point of Byzantine artistic production and influence. Stress will be placed upon the function of this art within the broader setting of this society. Art theory, the notions of empire and holiness, the burdens of the past and the realities of contemporary praxis will be brought to bear upon our various analyses of material from all media. How art historians can write the history of this rich culture will be a central issue of this course.

334. Romanesque Art
(3-0-3)
Open to all students.
This course will examine the place of art in an expanding culture. The 11th and 12th centuries witnessed the economic and military expansion of the societies of Western Europe. This growth produced a complex and rich art that can be broadly labeled as Romanesque. The course will investigate this phenomenon (or rather these phenomena) through three actual and metaphorical journeys: the pilgrimage to Santiago de Compostela, a journey to the ruins of ancient Rome, and a visit to the Palestine of the Crusades. These journeys, in many ways typical of this period, will provide the means of examining how the art of this period responds to the various new demands of an increasing knowledge provoked by travel.

335. Gothic Art in France
(3-0-3)
Open to all students.
This course will examine the art produced in France in the 13th and 14th centuries. Alongside the more traditional discussions of court culture and of the development of Gothic architecture, this class will use the power, class, gender, spirituality, identity, and learning. The first half of this course will treat such institutions as Saint-Denis, Chartres, and the Sainte-Chapelle as complex cultural phenomena that weave together a variety of visual media into strong political and spiritual messages. The second half of the course will examine devotional practices and their importance in defining responses to the arts available at this period.

342. Survey of Italian Renaissance Art
(3-0-3)
Open to all students.
This course will examine the painting, sculpture and architecture produced in Italy from the very end of the 12th through the beginning of the 16th century, from Giotto’s Franciscan spirituality to Michelangelo’s heroic vision of man and God. A wide variety of questions will be considered in the context of this chronological survey, including changing conventions of representation, the social function of art, and the impact of the Renaissance ideology of individual achievement on the production of art and the role of the artist.

346. Survey of Italian Baroque Art: From Caravaggio to Tiepolo
(3-0-3)
Open to all students.
This course surveys Italian painting, sculpture, and architecture of the 17th and 18th centuries, a period which also witnessed the foundation and suppression of the Jesuit Order, the Counter-Reformation, absolute monarchy, and democratic nations. Thus, the course begins with the ”new Rome” of Pope Sixtus V, which attracted pilgrims and artists from all over Europe, and ends with the early years of Enlightenment. From Northern Italy came Caravaggio and the Carracci, artists who were responsible for creating a new style based upon High Renaissance principles and a new kind of naturalism derived from the study of life. There was Bernini, whose architectural and sculptural monuments almost singlehandedly gave Rome its Baroque character. Other artists and architects of this era under discussion include such diverse personalities as Borromini, Guarini, Algardi, Artemisia Gentileschi, and the great ceiling painters Pietro da Cortona, Baccio, Pozzo, and Tiepolo.

347. Survey of European Baroque Art
(3-0-3)
Open to all students.
This course will examine the art of Europe during the 17th century. The first third of the semester will be devoted to the world of Counter-Reformation Italy and the work of individual artists such as Caravaggio and Gian Lorenzo Bernini. The second third of the term will focus on Spanish painting, particularly the work of Francisco Zurbarán and Diego Velázquez. The final section of the course will consider painting in the Low Countries, looking at the art of Rubens, Rembrandt, Vermeer and others. Among the issues to be addressed are art and spirituality, shifting modes of patronage, art and politics, and definitions of gender.

356. History of Photography
(3-0-3)
Open to all students.
This course deals with the development and use of photography as an artistic medium from the time of its invention in the mid-19th century to the present. Besides viewing slides, the student will be able to view a large number of original photographs from the Snite Museum of Art.

366. Modern Art I—1900 to 1955: Utopianism andIconoclasim
(3-0-3)
Open to all students.
This introductory course focuses on early 20th-century art and cultural politics in Europe, Russia and the United States. In the early modern period, many of the most ambitious and innovative artists strove to destroy old models of art, often replacing them with models that advocate revolutionary forms for a new, imaginary society; at other times, artists have employed art to undermine accepted norms of bourgeois culture and to liberate art and experience from convention. These are themes addressed in this course, along with the contradictory reality in which the art arose: an era defined by massive wars, racist ideologies, and violent suppressions. Among the selected artists analyzed are Pablo Picasso, Henri Matisse, Piet Mondrian, Marcel Duchamp, Hannah Höch, Lyubov Popova, Salvador Dalí, Walter Gropius, Diego Rivera and Jackson Pollock.

367. Twentieth-Century Art II: 1955 to present
(3-0-3)
Open to all students.
This introductory course is subtitled “Technocapitalism and the Art of Accommodation.” The post-World War II era, particularly in the United States, is marked by the greatest expansion of corporate and consumer capitalism in history. Massive wars are fought to defend capitalist ideology. (A case in point is the tragic Vietnam War.) How has art figured into these social transformations? Has art protested these conditions or easily accommodated itself to overpowering economic, political, and legalistic techno-capitalist regimes? These questions arise throughout this course, which concentrates on selective artistic events in the United States and Europe during the second half of the 20th century. Movements considered include pop art, minimalism, op art, arte povera, postminimalism, earth art, conceptual art, photo-realism, video and performance art, and other recent picture/theory approaches to art making. This course focuses on recent developments in painting and sculpture. It also examines associated theories of art criticism.
369. The Art of Mythology
(3-0-3) Staff
Open to all students.
This cross-disciplinary class is an exploration of the representation of classical myth in Western art and literature, ranging from the seventh century B.C.E. to the 18th century C.E. Beginning with mythological subjects in the political and religious sculpture, temple architecture and vase decoration of Ancient Greece, we will move on to study Roman painting and sculpture, medieval Ovidian allegory, the Renaissance reinvention of classical types and 18th-century neo-classicism. We will compare literary and visual narratives, evaluating the discursive modes of each, and analyzing how and why poets, philosophers, artists, sculptors, and architects selected and adapted the episodes that they did. Primary readings will include selections from Greek and Roman epic, lyric and dramatic poetry, Greek and Roman philosophical mythology, and early analyses of the relationship between art and myth such as Philostratus’ Eikones. Among the artistic works that we will examine will be Raphael’s Roman cycles, Bellini and Titian’s poesie, and Bernini’s sculpted dramas. We will consider the erudite contexts for such works, including gardens, drawing rooms, princely residences, and civic institutions. We will discuss the connection between political power and myth, and concepts such as heroism, metamorphosis, and earthly and divine love. One aim of this class will be to identify the explanatory character of myth, and of story-telling within culture, as means of historical self-understanding, self-revelation, and catharsis.

370. Modeling Sanctity: The Saint in Image and Text
(3-0-3)
Open to all students.
This course examines the lives and legacy of selected saints with a view to defining the ideal qualities and criteria by which sainthood is made known.

Incorporating visual as well as textual materials, hagiographies, theological writings and written testimonies, this course will consider the varieties of evidence that testify to sanctity. An important part of this course will be a discussion of how different kinds of evidence must be evaluated according to their medium and audience — for example, how visual portraits (whether portrait, narrative cycle or manuscript representations) can be compared to written ones and differentiated from textual sources not only in iconographic terms but as unique and forceful forms of knowledge in their own right.

The saints we will focus on during the semester (concentrating on the period extending from late medieval times through the 17th century) include, most prominently, Saints Augustine, Bernard, Dominic, Francis, and Theresa of Avila. Each member of the class will choose a saint other than those studied as a case study and the subject of the student’s independent research.

371. Art of the Mexican Ballgame
(3-0-3) Open to all students.
The ritual ballgame was an athletic event that formed one of the major religious expressions of Mexican culture from 1500 B.C.E. to A.D. 1521. The ceramic, stone and wood sculptures used to depict players, to protect them, to hit the ball, and to mark the position of the ball in the ball court reflect the basic themes of Mesoamerican existence: the concern with the promotion of life and fertility, the necessity of human sacrifice to maintain order in the universe, and the duality expressed in the tension between these two forces. Ballgame sculptures remain among the finest art objects produced in Mesoamerica. This course will introduce the student to the Mesoamerican worldview by tracing the origins of ballgame art from the Olmec civilization — the mother culture of Mesoamerica that forged the template of pre-Columbian cultural development — down to Aztec times. Each week’s classes will consist of a thorough examination of the iconography and function of art objects through slide lectures, as well as hands on, in-depth study of individual pieces of sculpture from the collections of the Snite Museum of Art. Special emphasis will be placed upon the essential unity of religious concepts as iconography evolved over a 3,000-year time span. This will be an object-oriented course. Students will be called upon to reason logically, voice opinions, and make aesthetic judgments. A good visual memory is helpful.

374. African Art and Culture
(3-0-3) Open to all students.
This course outlines the power and elegance of African sculpture from the last 500 years against the rich fabric of constantly evolving African cultures. This will be an object-oriented course, and typical works of art from the five sculpture-producing culture areas of the continent will be examined in each session. Slide lectures will provide the cultural context of each style. Students will be called upon to reason logically, voice opinions, and make aesthetic judgments. A good visual memory is helpful.

375B. Fashioning Identity in American History
(3-0-3) Open to all students.
This course will focus on dress and material/visual culture in American history starting with the Colonial period. It will provide an introduction to methodology, and offer an overview of key themes in the history of dress and consumerism within the framework of gender studies. In one segment of the course, we will focus on the Colonial period as a case study: we will analyze the economics of dress (the production, marketing and acquisition of clothing) and will assess the importance of fashion to commerce. We will then evaluate the role of dress in the construction of colonial identities, and we will examine the ways that dress operated as a visual focus for racial, class and ethnic encounters in American societies. In another segment, students will be given the opportunity to work on and present independent research from any period or area of American studies.

403. Anthropology of Art
(3-0-3) Open to all students.
This course is an examination of art as a functional part of culture from the anthropological point of view. Attention will be given to both the evolution of art as part of human culture and to the evolution of the study of art by anthropologists.

408. Native North American Art
(3-0-3) Art department majors only.
Native North American art existed for thousands of years and continues to be created today. Its original context was most often sacred (both public and private) and/or political. Contact with Western Europeans and their art traditions beginning about A.D. 1600 and thereafter, along with the art traditions of Africans, Asians, and South Americans, modified form, technique, and context of Native North American art.

This course will allow students to work with the collections of Native North Americans curated at the Snite Museum. Students will observe some of the changes in art which have occurred in the last 150 years. Students’ final projects will include a visual presentation of a particular change in content, context or technique, which they have determined through research and direct examination of selected pieces from our collections. The course is limited to 15 students and will be held in the Snite Museum.
421. Classical Greek Art
(3-0-3)
Open to all students.
This course analyzes and traces the development of Greek architecture, painting and sculpture from the beginning of the fifth century B.C. through the death of Alexander the Great in 323 B.C. Particular emphasis is placed upon the monumental arts, their historical and cultural contexts, and how they reflect changing attitudes toward the gods, human achievement, and the relationship between the divine and the human.

422. Hellenistic Art
(3-0-3)
Open to all students.
This course examines the complex artistic production of the Greek world in the three centuries following the death of Alexander the Great in 323 B.C. and the division of his immense empire into separately administered kingdoms. The relationship of Hellenistic art and culture to their Classical forebears, the development of an artistic and cultural keime in the Hellenistic world, and the Hellenization of Republican Rome will all be considered.

423. Greek Architecture
(3-0-3) Open to all students.
In this course, the development of Greek monumental architecture and the major problems that define it will be traced from the eighth through the second centuries B.C., from the late Geometric through the Archaic, Classical and Hellenistic periods. Among themes to be treated are the relationship between landscape and religious architecture, the humanization of temple divinities, the architectural expression of religious tradition and even specific history, architectural procession and hieratic direction, emblem and narration in architectural sculpture, symbolism and allusion through architectural order, religious revival and archaism, and the breaking of the architectural and religious canon.

425. Roman Architecture
(3-0-3) Open to all students.
The content of this course spans 11 centuries, from the eighth century B.C. to the fourth century of the modern era, and traces the development of Roman architecture from its origins in Iron Age huts on the Palatine Hill and Etruscan temples and tombs, through the Roman colonization of the Italian peninsula and the establishment of basic tenets of town planning, through the conquest of Greece and the consequent Hellenization of Rome, through the invention of Roman concrete and the gradual exploration of its practical properties and its potential for spatial manipulation, through the architectural expression of propaganda and ideal in the great building programs of the emperors, to the creation of a specifically Christian architecture from the combined architectural forms and spirit of Greece and Rome.

441. Trecento: Giotto to the Duomo
(3-0-3) Open to all students.
Beginning with Giotto’s Scrovegni Chapel in Padua, we will examine the arts in Italy in the 1300s, concluding with Brunelleschi’s revolutionary design for the dome of Florence Cathedral of 1436. We will consider the regional traditions of Rome and the city-states, including Siena, Venice, Florence and Pisa and as expressed in narrative fresco programs, altarpieces, sculpture and architecture. Among our subjects are the royal tombs in Naples and Milan, the evolution of the equestrian monument, St. Mark’s in Venice, the character of Gothic expression in Italy, and the impact of the Black Death.

442. 15th-Century Italian Art
(3-0-3) Open to all students.
This course investigates the century most fully identified with the Early Renaissance in Italy. Individual works by artists such as Brunelleschi, Donatello, Ghiberti, Botticelli, and Alberti are set into their social, political and religious context. Special attention is paid to topics such as the origins of art theory, art and audience, portraiture and the definition of self, Medicinal patronage, and art for the Renaissance courts of northern Italy and Naples.

443. Northern Renaissance Art
(3-0-3) Open to all students.
This course traces the development of painting in northern Europe (France, Germany, Flanders, and Holland) from approximately 1300 to 1560. Special attention is given to the art of Jan van Eyck, Heinrich Bosch, Albrecht Dürer, and Pieter Bruegel. In tracing the evolution of manuscript and oil painting and the graphic media, students become conscious of the special wedding of nature, art, and spirit that defines the achievement of the northern Renaissance.

444. Italian High Renaissance and Mannerist Art
(3-0-3) Leonardo, Michelangelo, Bramante and Raphael provide the basis for a study of one of the most impressive periods of artistic activity in Italy — the High Renaissance in Rome and Florence. The course also investigates the origins of Mannerism in the expressive achievements of such notable figures as Jacopo Pontormo, Rosso Fiorentino and the succeeding generation of late-Renaissance maniera artists who helped to formulate a new courtly style.

446. Seminar: Venetian and Northern Italian Art
(3-0-3) Open to all students.
This course focuses on significant artistic developments of the 16th century in Venice, with brief excursions into Lombardy and Piedmont. Giorgione, Titian and Palladio, the formulators of the High Renaissance style in Venice, and subsequent artists such as Tintoretto and Veronese are examined. An investigation of the art produced in important provincial and urban centers such as Brescia, Cremona, Milan, Parma, Varallo and Vercelli also provide insight into the unique traditions of the local schools and their patronage.

447. Italian Baroque Art
(3-0-3) The focus of this course is on Roman art of the 17th century. The evolution of the style and content of painting, sculpture and architecture in baroque Italy is considered in light of the social, political and religious climate of the period. Among the artists considered are Caravaggio, the Bolognese Carracci and their followers, Guercino, Artemisia Gentileschi, Bernini and Borromini.

448. Northern Baroque Painting
(3-0-3) Open to all students.
Epitomized by the self-conscious art of Rembrandt, Northern Baroque painting and printmaking not only became a domestic commodity sold in a more modern-looking marketplace, it also continued to serve its traditional political, moral and spiritual functions. This course will concentrate on paintings and prints produced in Flanders, Spain, and the Dutch Republics during the 17th century, an era of extraordinary invention. The work of artists such as Rubens, van Dyck, Velázquez, Zurbarán, Lely, Hals, and Rembrandt will be considered in the context of a number of interrelated themes, including the business of art, the status of the artist, art in service of the state, the rise of genre, gender stereotypes, allegory, and art, religion, and spirituality.

449. Seminar in 18th-Century European Art
(3-0-3) Open to all students.
Profound and universal inquiry into all aspects of knowledge marked the history of the century of the Enlightenment and the Grand Tour. The rise of the collective idea of nature, the study and instrumentation of the antique, the foundations of religion, the state, morality and reason, the relationship of the arts to the state, the philosophy of aesthetic were all critically analyzed and questioned.
This course investigates various stylistic trends in 18th-century art in Italy, France and England with a focus on the institutionalization of art through the academies. Discussion also centers on classical art theory and its relationship to the academies in light of the social, political and religious climate of the period. We will also consider the aesthetical, art historical and social consequences of the writings of Kant, Burke and Winckelmann. The course begins with the late baroque paintings of Carlo Maratti and his followers and then moves to subsequent stylistic trends as neoclassicism, Egyptian revival, and the rococo. Attention is also given to the vedute painters and to such diverse personalities as Piranesi, Mengs, Kauffmann, Tiepolo, Watteau and Chardin.

451. American Art
(3-0-3)
This course examines American painting, architecture and sculpture from Puritan culture to the end of World War I. The approach is to examine the development of American art under the impact of social and philosophical forces in each historical era. The course explores the way in which artists and architects give expression to the tensions and sensibilities of each period. Among the major themes of the course are the problem of America’s self-definition, the impact of religious and scientific thought on American culture, Americans’ changing attitudes toward European art, and the American contribution to modernism.

452. British Art
(3-0-3)
This course is a general survey of the development of British painting from 1560 to 1980. In this context, the relationship between English 17th-century and early 18th-century and American colonial painting are considered, alongside a discussion of uniquely British traditions.

453. Nineteenth-Century European Art
(3-0-3)
Open to all students. This survey of 19th-century painting treats the major figures of the period within the context of the social, political, and intellectual ferment that shaped the culture. Among the artists included are Jacques-Louis David, Eugène Delacroix, Francisco Goya, Jean-Auguste-Dominique Ingres, Caspar David Friedrich, Joseph Mallard Willian Turner, John Constable, Gustave Courbet, Camille Corot, Jean-François Millet, Édouard Manet, Claude Monet, Pierre-Auguste Renoir, and Edgar-Hilaire Degas. Some of the major themes addressed are the relationships between tradition and innovation, between the artist and the public, and between the artist and nature. These topics are set against the dynamic forces of change released with the French revolution and the urban and industrial revolutions.

463. History of Design: Form, Values, and Technology
(3-0-3)
Open to all students. This course will provide a historical perspective on the development of industrial, product and graphic design in the 19th and 20th centuries. More than the aesthetic styling of products, design mediates the intersection of technology and cultural values in the modern era. The role of the modern designer as both a facilitator and a critic of industrial technology will be examined.

471. Topics in Greek and/or Roman Art
(3-0-3)
Topics course on special areas of Greek and/or Roman art.

472. Topics in Byzantine Art
(3-0-3)
Prerequisite: 200- or 300-level Art History course or permission. The content of this course will change from year to year. Intended for senior undergraduates, it will examine narrow themes. Readings and discussion will be central to this class. Topics that might be addressed include gender and sexuality, court culture, monasticism and spirituality, and colonialism.

473. Topics in Renaissance Art
(3-0-3)
Topics course on special areas of Renaissance art.

474. Topics in Baroque Art
(3-0-3)
Topics course on special areas of Baroque art.

475. Topics in American Art
(3-0-3)
Topics course on special areas of American art.

476. Topics in British Art
(3-0-3)
Topics course on special areas of British art.

477. Topics in Modern European Art
(3-0-3)
Topics course on special areas of 19th-century and 20th-century European art.

478. Topics in Contemporary Art
(3-0-3)
Topics course on special areas of Contemporary art.

481. Seminar in Greek and/or Roman Art *

488. Seminar in Contemporary Art *
(3-0-3)
Permission required. Seminar on specific subjects in Contemporary art.

490. Art History Methods
(3-0-3)
Required of all art history majors. Permission required. This seminar is a survey of the historiography of art history, with special attention paid to the various types of methodology which have been applied to the analysis of art. Special attention is given to 19th-century and 20th-century art historical methods, including connoisseurship, biography, iconology, psychoanalysis, and semiotic and feminist approaches.

498. Special Studies
(V-V-V)
Permission required. Independent study in art history under the direction of an individual faculty member.

* In seminars, the particular area of concentration will be determined each time the course is offered. Students will be expected to research a topic, present their findings to the seminar, and submit a paper summarizing their conclusions.
The lower-level courses equip the student with rudimentary knowledge of languages and with a conspectus of ancient history and culture. Advanced courses in Latin and Greek literature and the limited-enrollment courses in Ancient Civilization provide opportunities for more focused and detailed study and are conducted in a seminar format with emphasis on research and writing.

In addition to the other University requirements, students majoring in classics will, under normal circumstances, complete at least 10 courses in one of three areas of concentration:

Greek, Latin or Classical Civilization.

Greek major
5 courses in Greek language/literature:
- 103 and above 15
- 2 courses in Latin 6
- 2 courses in classics or related subjects approved by the department 6
- Greek History 3

Latin major
5 courses in Latin language/literature:
- 103 and above 15
- 2 courses in Greek 6
- 2 courses in Classics or related subjects approved by the department 6
- Roman History 3

Classical Civilization major
Greek Literature and Culture
(or approved equivalent) 3
Roman Literature and Culture
(or approved equivalent) 3
Greek & Roman Mythology 3
2 additional courses in Classics or related subjects approved by the department 6
Greek History 3
Roman History 3
3 courses in Greek or Latin 9

Supplementary majors
Supplementary majors in Greek are exempt from the Latin requirement. Supplementary majors in Latin are exempt from the Greek requirement. Supplementary majors in Classical Civilization are exempt from the Latin or Greek requirement but are expected to take an additional course in classics. All other requirements are the same as those for the primary major.
CLASSICS

GREEK

101-102. Beginning Greek I and II
(3-0-3) (3-0-3) Ladouceur, Schlegel

465. St. Augustine’s Confessions
(3-0-3) Sheerin
This course provides an introduction to St. Augustine’s Confessions, through reading of extensive selections from the Latin text, a careful reading of the entire work in English translation, and the application of a variety of critical approaches, old and new.
475. Introduction to Christian Latin Texts (Medieval Latin I)
(3-0-3) Sheerin
This class has two goals: to improve the student’s all-around facility in dealing with Latin texts and to introduce the student to the varieties of Christian Latin texts. Medieval Latin II, a survey of medieval Latin texts, follows this course in the spring term.

498. Special Studies in Latin Literature
(3-0-3) Staff
Permission of department required.

No prerequisites.

121. Ancient Greece and Rome
(3-0-3) Mazurek
An introduction to the major historical and cultural periods of ancient Greek and Roman civilization through close reading of texts central to the Classical Greek and Latin literary traditions. Topics to be considered include: concepts of the divine; heroism and virtue; concepts of gender; democracy, empire, and civic identity. The course aims to deepen students’ appreciation for the Classical roots of their own social, intellectual, and religious lives.

150. Introduction to Greco-Roman Mythology
(3-0-3) McLaren
This course surveys the mythologies of Greece and Rome and traces their transmission and influence down to the present day. We examine Greek and Roman myths as embodied in a wide variety of ancient media, as well as the way in which these stories and characters survive and are transformed in later literature and the visual arts. The class is designed not only to introduce students to a number of the characters, themes, and plot lines that have helped define the West, but also to introduce students early in their college careers to a number of the interpretive methodologies currently at the forefront of teaching and scholarship in the humanities.

180H. History University Seminar
(3-0-3) Stanfield
An introduction to the seminar method of instruction that introduces students to the material life and culture of the Roman Empire and that emphasizes research methods as well as organization and expression of arguments.

180L. Literature University Seminar
(3-0-3) Staff

207. Egyptian Civilization
(3-0-3) Ladouceur
An introduction to the history and culture of pharaonic Egypt, with particular attention to the history of Egyptian religion, literature, art and architecture.

300. Greek Literature and Culture
(3-0-3) Staff
Survey of masterpieces of Greek literature, history and philosophy, designed as classical background for humanities students. Readings from Homer, Aeschylus, Sophocles, Euripides, Thucydides, Plato and Aristotle.

301. Roman Literature and Culture
(3-0-3) Staff
Survey of masterpieces of Latin literature, history and philosophy designed as classical background for humanities students. Readings from Catullus, Lucretius, Cicero, Virgil, Ovid, Tacitus and Juvenal.

305. Greek History
(3-0-3) Vacca
Ancient Greek history from the Bronze Age to the Roman conquest and the appearance of Christianity. Emphasizes social and cultural developments as well as political history.

306. Roman History
(3-0-3) Staff
Introduction to the history of the Roman Empire, from the founding of Rome in the eighth century B.C. to the collapse of the western empire in the fifth century A.D. Special topics include the political careers of Cicero, Julius Caesar and Augustus, social issues such as warfare and slavery, and the legacy of Roman historical writing.

307. Introduction to Egyptology
(3-0-3) Ladouceur
A methods-oriented course that provides an introduction to the discipline of Egyptology; areas covered include the history of Egyptology, interpretation of archeological evidence, the reading of hieroglyphic texts, the establishment of chronology, and the use of comparative social science models. Prior enrollment in Egyptian Civilization is not required but strongly advised.

308. Roman Law and Governance
(3-0-3) Mazurek
Students will study all branches of Roman government, with special emphasis on the judiciary and the development of Roman law from the XII Tables to Justinian’s Digest. Students will gain a thorough understanding of the bureaucratic operation of the ancient Roman state.

Prior study of Roman history is recommended but not required.

310. Latin Literature in Translation
(3-0-3) Sheerin
This is a survey, in lecture/discussion format, of selected works of Classical Latin literature. In addition to close reading of the texts, we routinely give attention to the sociocultural worlds that produced Latin literature and to the character of Latin literature’s abiding influence in Christian antiquity, the Middle Ages, the Renaissance and early modern periods, and modern cultures. Weekly quizzes, biweekly essays, and a final.

311. Roman Slavery
(3-0-3) Bradley
A survey of the role slavery played in the maintenance of Roman civilization and culture. Topics studied include how the Romans acquired slaves, how they were treated, what jobs they performed, their living conditions, and their response to being enslaved. Particular attention is paid to ancient philosophical thought about slavery, including early Christian thought.

326. Medieval Latin Literature in Translation
(3-0-3) Sheerin
A survey of works of Medieval Latin literature from the sixth through the 13th century read in English translation.

330. Hieroglyphs and History
(3-0-3) Ladouceur
This course focuses on Egyptian hieroglyphics both as a means to reconstruct Egyptian history and culture as well as a reflection of that culture. The student will be taught to translate and interpret primary sources, especially on monuments and archeological finds.

335. History of Ancient Medicine
(3-0-3) Ladouceur
This course will trace the development of ancient medicine from the neolithic period down to the second century after Christ. The emphasis will be on three cultures, Egyptian, Greek, and Roman. How historians use the three main categories of evidence (written documents, human remains and artistic representations) will be clearly illustrated.

340. Democracy and the Greeks
(3-0-3) Vacca
An in-depth study of the Athenian Democracy and its critics, and the influence of this material for the fundamentals of European practical theory. All texts in translation.

355. Women in Antiquity
(3-0-3) Mazurek
An examination of women’s roles in ancient Greek and Roman society. A comparison of mythological and literary images of women with everyday lives of Greek and Roman women. Origins of Western attitudes toward women.

356. Portraits of Heroic Women from Classical and Early Christian Literature
(3-0-3) Sheerin
Figures to be studied include Helen of Troy and Mary of Egypt, Hypatia and Lysistrata, Clytemnestra and Alcestis; particular attention will be given to the fragmentary self-portraits left by Sappho and Vibia Perpetua.

360. Classical Love Literature
(3-0-3) Sheerin
A survey of the Greco-Roman literature of love: amatory poetry, drama and theoretical treatments of love and friendship. Both pagan and Christian texts will be explored.
369. The Art of Mythology
(3-0-3) McLaren, Gil
This course surveys the mythologies of Greece and Rome and traces their transmission and influence down to the present day. We examine Greek and Roman myths as embodied in a wide variety of ancient media, as well as the way in which these stories and characters survive and are transformed in later literature and the visual arts. The class is designed not only to introduce students to a number of the characters, themes, and plot lines that have helped define the West, but also to introduce them early in their college careers to a number of the interpretive methodologies that are currently at the forefront of teaching and scholarship in the humanities.

423. Greek Architecture
(3-0-3)
In this course, the development of Greek monumental architecture and the major problems that define it will be traced from the eighth through the second centuries B.C., from the late Geometric through the Archaic, Classical and Hellenistic periods. Among themes to be treated are the relationship between landscape and religious architecture, the humanization of temple divinities, the architectural expression of religious tradition and even specific history, architectural process and hieratic direction, emblem and narration in architectural sculpture, symbolism and allusion through architectural order, religious revival and archaism, and the breaking of the architectural and religious canon.

450. Greek and Roman Mythology
(3-0-3) McLaren
The major mythical tales and figures from the classical world which have influenced world literature. Study of the Olympic and vegetation cults. Homer and Hesiod, national and local myth, Syncretism, Mysteries.

455. Classical Epic
(3-0-3) Schlegel
A study of the epic literature of classical antiquity in English translation, this course will give students a solid grasp of the texts of the classical epics and the cultural contexts in which they were set.

460. Greek Tragedy (in translation)
(3-0-3) McLaren
Origins and functions of tragedy. Readings from Aeschylus, Sophocles, Euripides.

470. Roman Satire
(3-0-3) Mazurek
A study of the origins, forms and influence of Roman Satire. Readings from the works of Lucretius, Horace, Persius, Petronius, Juvenal, Lucian, Swift and Pope.

482. Sem: Vision and Ecstasy in Medieval Art
(3-0-3) Barber
This seminar addresses a wide range of Medieval texts and objects that will enable us to analyze the nature of Medieval vision as it pertains to the visual arts. The type of texts included will be theological, epistemological, liturgical, rhetorical, and philosophical. Objects will include architecture, illuminated manuscripts, frescoes, mosaics, and icons. The seminar encompasses both Byzantium and the Latin West. The primary purpose of the seminar is to examine the complexity of visual experience as a form of knowledge. The secondary purpose is to consider the extent to which this experience is ecstatic, disrupting our modernist notion of the observer subject as the foundation of knowledge. Participants in the seminar will be expected to write a lengthy term paper on a topic that interests them.

498. Special Studies

Program in Irish

The program in Irish offers language courses at the beginning (two semesters) and intermediate (one semester) levels. Irish is the Celtic language often called “Gaelic.” It is one of the languages of the so-called “Celtic fringe” of northwest Europe and is related, most closely, to Scottish Gaelic and, more distantly, to Welsh and Breton (northwest France). These are all fully-fledged modern languages in their own right, but they offer something fascinatingly “different” in the Western European context. Irish is the oldest attested written European language outside the classical languages and, as such, offers a window on a kind of civilization long passed away in most of Western Europe. The emphasis of these courses is, however, very much a modern one: They teach the contemporary language as spoken in the “Gaelacháí” (Irish-speaking areas) of Ireland today. The initial emphasis is on basic listening, speaking and writing. At least one class per week is conducted in the Language Resource Center to enable students to work on pronunciation and communicative skills. Students are also introduced to various aspects of Irish language and culture through the reading of simple texts in the original language.

Interested students should also consult the listings in this Bulletin under Irish studies, English, political science, history, and medieval studies for complementary courses in Irish studies. Graduate students should consult the Graduate School Bulletin for information on the appropriate 500-level “Studies in the Irish Language” courses.

Course Descriptions.
Courses in Arabic, Syriac and Hebrew offer instruction in the languages, literatures and cultures of the Middle East. The study of these languages is necessary for an understanding of Semitic culture and as background for the development of Judaism, Christianity, Islam and Middle Eastern contacts with the Classical world, with Africa, Europe and America.

In recent years, the West has become increasingly aware of the Arabic-speaking East. Courses in Arabic language and literature are a prerequisite for an understanding of the rise of Islam, the literature it produced and subsequent developments among Arab-speaking Muslims and Christians.

Courses in Syriac taught at the graduate level are available to qualified undergraduates by permission.
Course Descriptions. The following course descriptions give the number, the title and a brief characterization of each course. Lecture or class hours per week, laboratory or tutorial hours per week and credits each semester are in parentheses. Not all of these courses are offered every year.

Arabic Major
4 semesters of Arabic 12
2 literature courses in Classics taught by the Arabic faculty 6
2 courses in Middle East history 6
1 course in Islam 3
1 elective, subject to departmental approval 3

Mediterranean/Middle East Area Studies Minor
This is a broad-based program that includes all aspects of the ancient and modern cultures that surround the Mediterranean. Courses from three regions apply. In Europe, this includes the study of Classical Greece and Rome as well as modern Italy, France, Spain and Portugal in Europe. Courses on the Middle East are related to the study of Semitic peoples and their cultures, languages, religions and politics. In North Africa, Arab and Francophone history and civilization are the focus.

Students are required to fulfill a sequence of 12 credits (four courses distributed over the area). In addition, they are required to write a major research essay under the direction of one of the advisors for three credits.

Arabic
101-102. Beginning Arabic I and II (3-0-3) Staff
An introduction to modern standard Arabic. Principles of basic grammar, syntax and vocabulary.

103. Intermediate Arabic (3-0-3) Staff
A continuation of Arabic I and II with emphasis on writing and speaking for self-expression.

104. Continuing Arabic (3-0-3) Guo
Continues the study of Arabic beyond the intermediate level and introduces students to modern journalistic texts.

105. Advanced Arabic I (3-0-3) Staff
Commences study of formal Arabic literary texts with additional emphasis on classroom discussion in Arabic.

106. Advanced Arabic II (3-0-3) Staff
Continuation of advanced study of literary Arabic.

Courses in English
235. Arabic Literature in English Translation: Fiction (3-0-3) Guo
The object of this course is to introduce the student to Arabic literature—a major world literature that remains largely unexplored in the West—from its beginning to the present. The course will read and discuss, in a seminar context and from a broadly comparative perspective, key works of medieval Arabic narrative prose, the Arabian Nights and the Maqamat, and selected works of modern Arabic fiction by the Nobel laureate Naguib Mahfouz (Egypt), among others. There will also be several screenings of the film adaptations. Some of the issues to be discussed are the influence of the Arabian Nights in Western literature, representation and interpretation, and literary compositional strategies in “domesticating” an “imported” genre, namely fiction, used by modern Arab writers.

240. Middle East History from A.D. 100 to 1000 (3-0-3) Amar
A survey of the Middle East from ancient to modern times.

242. Revelation to Revolution: The Middle East from A.D. 100 to 1000 (3-0-3) Amar
This class investigates the interplay between Christianity and Islam in the Middle East from A.D. 100 to 1000. Topics include religious interaction, politics of empire, Arabic literature, art, and architecture.

255. Women’s Memories, Women’s Narratives (3-0-3) Afsaruddin
This course is an introduction to the religious literature of the Arab-Islamic world. Emphasis is on works from the classical and medieval periods of Islam, roughly from the seventh to the 14th century of the common era. We will read selections from the Qur’an (the sacred scripture of Islam), the Hadith literature (sayings attributed to the prophet Muhammad), the biography of the Prophet, commentaries on the Qur’an, historical and philosophical texts, and mystical poetry. All texts will be read in English translation. No prior knowledge of Islam and its civilization is assumed, although helpful.

260. The Golden Age of Islamic Civilization (3-0-3) Afsaruddin
This course will deal with the period A.D. 750-1055, commonly dubbed the “golden age” of Islamic civilization. This period under the Abbasid dynasty saw the greatest flowering of the arts, architecture, literature, the sciences, and religious and philosophical thought. This is the time, for example, of the caliph Harun al-Rashid of Arabian Nights fame, a man of legendary wealth and generosity, whose court attracted the best and the brightest of its time. The influence of medieval Islamic civilization upon Europe will be considered as well. All readings will be in English translation; no prior knowledge of Islam and its civilization is assumed. The course will supplement texts with audiovisual materials to attempt to provide an authentic “taste” of the age.

350. Christianity in the Middle East: Origins to the Present (3-0-3) Amar
Crosslisted with HIST 462 and THEO 345. The spread of Christianity from Jerusalem into Asia Minor and Europe is well documented. But Christianity is not a European phenomenon; it is Middle Eastern and Semitic in its origins. Why was the existence of Christianity in the Middle East marginalized by the earliest Christian historians? Why is Christianity in the Middle East so inadequately understood today? This course examines the evidence for Christianity articulated in the native Aramaic language and culture of the region. We investigate the origins and development of the indigenous “Oriental” churches of Syria, Lebanon, Jordan, Iraq and Iran, and the missionary activity that took the gospel into India and China. Topics include the Semitic approach to Jesus and the Gospel; Christianity and the Arabs; the impact of the Crusades. The course concludes with an investigation of Islamic fundamentalism and the diaspora of Middle Eastern Christians in Europe and the Americas. Drawing from local history, native accounts and archaeological evidence, we piece together the largely untold story of Christianity in the Middle East.

360. Canon and Literature of Islam (3-0-3) Afsaruddin
This course is an introduction to the religious literature of the Arab-Islamic world. Emphasis is on works from the classical and medieval periods of Islam, roughly from the seventh to the 14th century of the common era. We will read selections from the Qur’an (the sacred scripture of Islam), the Hadith literature (sayings attributed to the prophet Muhammad), the biography of the Prophet, commentaries on the Qur’an, historical and philosophical texts, and mystical poetry. All texts will be read in English translation. No prior knowledge of Islam and its civilization is assumed, although helpful.
390. Islam: Religion and Culture
(3-0-3) Afsaruddin
This course discusses the rise of Islam in the Arabian peninsula in the seventh century and its subsequent establishment as a major world religion and civilization. Lectures and readings deal with the core beliefs and institutions of Islam, with particular emphasis on religious and political thought from the Middle Ages through our own time. All readings are in English. No prerequisite.

400. Modern Arabic Fiction in Translation
(3-0-3) Guo
An introduction to the Arabic short story and novel, with emphasis on the emergence of Arabic fiction in the 20th century.

405. Arabic Literature in Translation
(3-0-3) Guo
(Crosslisted with ENGL 318C)
A survey of the development of Arabic literature in English translation. From the Qur’an through the classical period.

455. Cross, Crescent, Kublai Khan
(3-0-3) Amar
Study of the English translation of the diary of two 13th-century Christian monks of their journey from Beijing to the West.

498. Special Studies
(3-0-3) Staff
Permission of department required.

HEBREW

481-482. Elementary Biblical Hebrew I-II
(3-0-3) (3-0-3) Staff
A beginning course in classical Biblical Hebrew grammar and readings. An introduction to the Hebrew language, principally Biblical Hebrew grammar, morphology, vocabulary, syntax. We will work through a standard textbook of Biblical Hebrew, incorporating some work in Mishnaic and Modern Hebrew. No previous knowledge of Hebrew is assumed.

East Asian Languages and Literatures

The peoples of East Asia comprise one quarter of the world’s population and account for a similar proportion of the world’s production and consumption. This, along with the contemporary fusion of Asia and the West politically and economically, makes knowledge of the diverse languages and cultures of East Asia vital to an understanding of our global community and indispensable for the preparation of careers in the Pacific Rim focusing on business, public policy, literatures, and the arts. The Department of East Asian Languages and Literatures provides the resources and instruction necessary for success in all of these fields. The department is dedicated to providing rigorous language training in Chinese and Japanese as well as courses taught in English on Chinese and Japanese philosophy, religion, literature, and culture. Complementary courses in other disciplines are listed in this Bulletin under departments such as history, philosophy, theology, political science, economics, and anthropology.

Completion of First-Year Chinese or Japanese (10 credits) or Beginning Japanese (nine credits) will satisfy the language requirement for both the College of Arts and Letters and the College of Science. Although the College of Business does not have a language requirement, it strongly supports integration of language courses into its curriculum and encourages students to participate in the International Study Programs (See “International Study Programs” under Mendoza College of Business).

Placement and Language Requirement. Students who wish to enroll in a Chinese or Japanese language course beyond the 101 or 111 level must take a placement examination administered by the Department. Students testing out of 100-level language courses must complete at least one course at the 200 level or higher to satisfy the language requirement.

PROGRAM IN CHINESE

The program in Chinese offers language classes in Mandarin Chinese at the first-, second-, third-, and fourth-year levels, as well as courses in English on classical and modern Chinese literature and culture. Qualified students also have the opportunity to attend East China Normal University in Shanghai, People’s Republic of China.

The Chinese program offers first and supplementary majors and a minor.

Basic requirements: For the major, students must complete 30 credit hours, including Third-Year Chinese. For the supplementary major, students must complete 24 credit hours, including Third-Year Chinese. For the minor, students must complete 15 credit hours, including two semesters of language classes beyond the first year.

Other requirements: In addition to the language course requirements described above, First and Supplementary majors as well as the Minor also requires one course in Chinese literature. Remaining credit hours may be satisfied by taking additional Chinese language and literature courses, or East Asia-related courses approved by the academic advisor.

PROGRAM IN JAPANESE

The program in Japanese offers language classes in modern Japanese at the beginning, intermediate and advanced levels, as well as courses in English on classical and modern Japanese literature and culture. Qualified students also have the opportunity to attend Nanzan University in Nagoya, Japan.

The Japanese program offers first and supplementary majors and a minor.

Basic requirements: For the major, students must complete 30 credit hours, including 22 credits in language classes beyond the first year. For the supplementary major, students must complete 24 credit hours, including 16 credits in language classes beyond the first year. For the minor, students must complete 15 credit hours including two semesters of language classes beyond the first year.

Other requirements: In addition to the language course requirements described above, first and supplementary majors as well as the minor also require one course in Japanese literature. Remaining credit hours may be satisfied by taking additional Japanese language and literature courses, or East Asia-related courses approved by the academic advisor.
SHANGHAI AND NAGOYA PROGRAMS

The Shanghai and Nagoya programs provide students with the opportunity to spend an academic year at Nanzan University in Nagoya, Japan, or a semester or academic year at East China Normal University in Shanghai, People’s Republic of China. To qualify for the Shanghai Program, students must complete at least one semester of Chinese language study at Notre Dame with at least a 3.0 grade point average in the language courses. For the Nagoya Program, at least one year of Japanese language studies at Notre Dame with a 3.0 grade point average or better in the language courses is required. Students may attend Nanzan or East China Normal during their sophomore or junior year. Students who intend to combine a First or Supplementary major in Chinese or Japanese with a major in another discipline and who intend to apply for the Shanghai or Nagoya programs are urged to plan their course of studies carefully in consultation with their advisors prior to applying for either program. For more information and course listings, see “Nagoya Program” or “Shanghai Program” under “International Study Programs” in this Bulletin.

Course Descriptions. The following course descriptions give the number, title and brief characterization of each course. Lecture or class hours per week, laboratory or tutorial hours per week and credits each semester are in parentheses. Not all of these courses are offered every year.

CHINESE LANGUAGE COURSES

101-102-103. Beginning Chinese I, II, and III (3-0-3)(3-0-3)(3-0-3) Yin, Yang
For students with no background in Chinese. This is a three-semester sequence of three credit hours per semester covering the same material as 111-112 and designed to prepare students to enter 211. The sequence begins each spring with 101 and concludes the following spring with 103. Equal emphasis is placed on the basic skills of listening, speaking, reading, and writing. Students may expect to master a spoken vocabulary of about 1,000 words and a written vocabulary of 500 characters.

111-112. First-Year Chinese I and II (5-0-5) (5-0-5) Yin

411-412. Fourth-Year Chinese I and II (3-0-3) (3-0-3) Ge
Prerequisite: 312 or instructor’s permission.
Practice in advanced conversational, reading and writing skills, using newspapers, short fiction, videotapes and other authentic materials.

498. Special Studies (V-V-V) Staff
Prerequisite: instructor’s permission.
Requires “contractual agreement” with the professor prior to scheduling. For advanced students who wish to pursue an independent research project reading Chinese language materials.

JAPANESE LANGUAGE COURSES

For students with no background in Japanese. This is a three-semester sequence of three credit hours per semester covering the same material as 111-112 and designed to prepare students to enter 211. The sequence begins each spring with 101 and concludes the following spring with 103. The series provides an introduction to the fundamentals of modern Japanese, with equal emphasis on speaking, listening, reading, and writing. An introduction is provided of the hiragana and katakana syllabaries, and 200 kanji.

111-112. First-Year Japanese I and II (5-0-5) (5-0-5) Hanabusa
Introduction to the fundamentals of modern Japanese. Equal emphasis on speaking, listening, reading and writing. Introduction of the hiragana and katakana syllabaries, and 200 kanji.

211-212. Second-Year Japanese I and II (5-0-5) (5-0-5) Shiga
Prerequisite: 112 or instructor’s permission.
Continued training in the fundamentals of the modern language. Equal emphasis on speaking, listening, reading and writing. Introduction of approximately 200 kanji.

311-312. Third-Year Japanese I and II (3-0-3) (3-0-3) Hanabusa
Prerequisite: 212 or instructor’s permission.
The first in a sequence of intermediate courses offered for those students who do not participate in the Year-in-Japan Program. Development of oral/aural skills with an emphasis on typical conversational situations. Improvement of reading and writing skills.

411-412. Fourth-Year Japanese I and II (3-0-3) (3-0-3) Shiga
Prerequisite: 312 or instructor’s permission.
The second in a sequence of intermediate courses offered for those students who do not participate in the Year-in-Japan. Aimed at achieving a high proficiency in the four skills: speaking, listening, reading and writing.

498. Special Studies (3-0-3) Selden, Hanabusa
Prerequisite: Instructor’s permission based on student’s performance on a placement exam and oral interview at the beginning of the semester. This course takes students beyond textbook Japanese by introducing original materials created for Japanese audiences (literature, current events and video materials, etc.). Emphasis is on grammar and syntax, vocabulary building, speaking, reading and writing.

COURSES IN ENGLISH

The courses listed below use materials in English translation and require no prior background in Asian studies.

180. Literature University Seminar (3-0-3) Staff
An introduction to the study of East Asian literature. Focus either on Chinese or Japanese literature.

190. Chinese Calligraphy (1-0-1) Ge
A workshop for appreciating and practicing Chinese calligraphy and studying the history of the art.

250. Chinese Literary Traditions (3-0-3) Yang
A survey course introducing students to the major themes and genres of Chinese literature through selected readings of representative texts.

252. Introduction to Japanese Civilization (3-0-3) Brownstein
A survey of Japan’s cultural history from its origins in prehistoric times up to the middle of the 18th century.
253. Introduction to Chinese Civilization
(3-0-3) Staff
This course provides general historical and cultural background with a view to preparing students for more specialized courses in Asian studies. A historical overview accompanies thematic presentation of cultural achievements in philosophical and religious thought, literature, and the fine arts.

347. Modern Japan
See HIST 348.

350. Love, Death, and Revenge in Traditional Japanese Drama
(3-0-3) Brownstein
An introduction to Japanese classical theater (Noh, Kyogen, Bunraku and Kabuki) through readings and videotapes of selected plays.

353. Societies and Cultures of South Asia
See ANTH 353.

358. Gender Images in Modern Japanese Fiction
(3-0-3) Selden
An examination of the changing images of men and women during the modern era as seen in the novels and short stories of Japan’s finest male and female writers.

360. Heroism and Eroticism in Chinese Fiction
(3-0-3) Ge
A study of selected readings from pre-modern Chinese literature, and an examination of heroism and eroticism as two major literary themes in the Chinese context.

362. The Image of Woman in Chinese Literature
(3-0-3) Wan
This course explores changing images of women in Chinese literature, from her early appearance in folk poetry to the dominant role she comes to play in the vernacular novel and drama.

364. Scandal and Intrigue in Traditional Japanese Literature
(3-0-3) Selden
Explore the aesthetics and politics of courtship and marriage among the aristocracy of Japan. Readings include 10th- and 11th-century classics such as The Pillow Book, The Tale of Genji, and The Consumer Years.

368. Self and Society in Modern Japanese Literature
(3-0-3) Brownstein
A study of Japan’s modern masters of prose with a focus on how writers address the problem of “self” and the issue of what it means to be Japanese in the modern world.

370. 20th-Century Chinese Literature
(3-0-3) Ge
Crosslisted with HIST 362N.
A study of selected works from 20th-century Chinese literature (mainly fiction but also drama), with a special focus on understanding literary developments in their social context.

378. Japanese Women Writers
(3-0-3)
A study of Japanese “female” literature that reviews the important role of women writers in creating and maintaining the literary traditions of the land of the rising sun.

380. Chinese Ways of Thought
(3-0-3) Jensen
This is a special topics class on religion, philosophy, and the intellectual history of China that introduces the student to the world view and life experience of Chinese as they have been drawn from local traditions, as well as worship and sacrifice to heroes, and the cult of the dead. Through a close reading of primary texts in translation, it also surveys China’s grand philosophical legacy of Daoism, Buddhism, “Confucianism,” and “Neo-Confucianism” and the later religious accommodation of Christianity and Islam.

384. Popular Religion and the Practice of Philosophy in China
(3-0-3) Jensen
This lecture/discussion course will introduce the student to the plural religious traditions of the Chinese as manifested in ancestor worship, sacrifice, exorcism, and spirit possession. From an understanding of these practices, the course will offer insight into the mantic foundations of Chinese philosophy, especially metaphysics. Readings will consist of texts in translation of popular cults, as well as scholarly interpretations of these phenomena.

386. Chinese Pop Songs: Global/Local
(3-0-3) Wan
This course uses popular songs since the 1980s from China, Taiwan, and Hong Kong to examine various ways Chinese construct images of the self. Issues to be examined include nationalism, love as allegory, family, tradition versus modernity, and language politics. Attention will be given to the contexts in which popular music is produced and consumed globally and locally.

387. The City in Modern Chinese Fiction
(3-0-3) Lin
Examining portrayals of cities such as Beijing and Shanghai in fictional works, this course explores the image of the city as the big, the bad, and the irresistible site of desire for modernity in 20th-century China.

388. A Chinese Mosaic: Philosophy, Politic, and Religion
(3-0-3) Jensen
This is a special topics class that provides an introduction to the diverse lifeways constituting the puzzle of the Chinese people. The course will chart this terrain of current Chinese imagination as it has been shaped from the contending, and often contentious, influences of religion, philosophy, and politics, introducing students to the heralded works of the Chinese intellectual tradition while requiring critical engagement with the philosophic and religious traditions animating this culture. Thus, as they learn about China, students also will reflect on how Chinese and Westerners have interpreted it.

460. The Garden in Chinese Literature
(3-0-3) Yang
This course examines the literary representations of the garden in the Chinese tradition. Supplemented by visual materials, readings in poetry, fiction, drama, and prose illustrate the variegated configurations of the garden as a religious, philosophical, moral, and aesthetic space.

463. Gender and Power in Asian Cultures
See ANTH 463.

478. History of Chinese Medicine
See HIST 478M.

Program of Studies. The undergraduate major in economics within the College of Arts and Letters is designed to make a unique contribution to the student’s liberal education. The program provides students with the insights of scientific analysis and social perspective to deepen their understanding of the complex economic forces at work in society. Such an understanding is an essential ingredient in the intellectual development of an educated person. The program is also designed to prepare the student for a variety of professional objectives, including careers in public service and law as well as managerial positions in business and industry.

The major requires eight 300- and 400-level courses in economics. The best preparation for beginning the major is the completion of the two-semester Principles of Economics sequence (ECON 123/223 and 224), but these courses do not count as part of the required eight courses. The completion of the one-semester course Introduction to Economics (ECON 115/225) is an adequate alternative beginning to the major.

All majors must take three courses:
301. Intermediate Economic Theory — Micro
302. Intermediate Economic Theory — Macro
303. Statistics for Economics

In addition, students must satisfy a distribution requirement by taking one course in at least three of the following 10 areas.

Policy
310. Economics, Ethics, and Public Policy
339. Economics of Poverty
337. Economics of Education
340. Introduction to Public Policy
404. Topics in Applied Microeconomics
441. Public Budget Expenditure Policy
442. Tax Policy
446. Environmental Economics
447. Seminar in Health Care Policy
448. Seminar in Current Economic Policy
449. Seminar in Policy Evaluation
465. Stabilization Policy

Quantitative Methods
408. Game Theory and Strategic Analysis
433. Mathematics for Economists
434. Applied Econometrics
490. Econometrics

History and Philosophy of Economics
305. Philosophy of Economics
306. History of Economic Thought
307. Seminar in History and Philosophy of Economic Thought
405. Consumption and Happiness

Monetary and Financial Economics
421. Money, Credit, and Banking
422. The Financial System

Labor Economics
350. Labor Economics
450. Labor Relations Law
451. Employment Relations Law and Human Resources Practices
453. Collective Bargaining: the Private Sector
454. Collective Bargaining: the Public Sector
455. Topics in Labor
457. Economics of Gender and Ethnic Discrimination
458. Labor Arbitration

Development Economics
380. Development Economics
484. Economic Development of Latin America

International Economics
471. International Economics
472. International Trade
473. International Money

Industrial Organization
345. Industrial Organization
445. The Economics of Industrial Organization

Political Economy
315. Introduction to Political Economy
334. Topics in Political Economy
413. Marxian Economic Theory
414. Beyond Economic Man
416. Problems in Political Economy
435. Law and Economics

Urban and Regional Economics
367. Restoring Economic Vitality to the Inner City
430. The New Urban Crisis and Economic Analysis
489. Regional Economic Development

The remaining two courses may be any other 300- and 400-level courses the department offers, except those specifically designated as not fulfilling major requirements.

In addition, the student must fulfill an intensive writing requirement in one of the following ways: by taking a 300- or 400-level course specifically designated as an intensive writing course (students will receive information on this every semester); or by taking a special studies course which involves writing a term paper under the supervision of a faculty member; or writing a senior essay.

Course Clusters Within Economics. The economics program offers the undergraduate student the opportunity to concentrate in several different areas that may correspond to a student’s career goal or that may represent a broad common theme within economics. These areas are only suggestions, and there is no requirement that a student complete a cluster. Indeed, the economics major may desire to pursue a different cluster or some combination of the clusters listed below.

Pre-law Cluster
345. Industrial Organization
350. Labor Economics
441. Public Budget Expenditure Policy
442. Tax Policy
445. The Economics of Industrial Organization
450. Labor Relations Law
453. Collective Bargaining — Private Sector
454. Collective Bargaining — Public Sector
458. Labor Arbitration

Pre-M.B.A. Economics Cluster
345. Industrial Organization
350. Labor Economics
421. Money, Credit, and Banking
422. The Financial System
434. Applied Econometrics
465. Stabilization Policy
471. International Economics
472. International Trade
473. International Money
Departmental advisors will assist students in designing a program of study that meets their educational and career goals. Students are also encouraged to pursue related courses in other departments of the College of Arts and Letters and in the Mendoza College of Business. Materials relating to professional work in law, graduate study in business and graduate programs in public and foreign service are available from the director of undergraduate studies.

Graduate Courses. Advanced undergraduate majors are encouraged (in consultation with departmental advisors) to select graduate courses as a part of their programs. The following are recommended.

501. Graduate Macroeconomic Theory I
502. Graduate Microeconomic Theory I
506. History of Economic Thought and Methodology
522. Financial Institutions, Markets, and Instability
541. Labor Economics
542. Labor Theory
561. Economic Development
562. International Trade
581. Industrial Organization
591. Graduate Statistics
592. Econometrics I

Course Descriptions. The following course descriptions give the number and title of each course, lecture hours per week, laboratory and/or tutorial hours per week and credits each semester are in parentheses. The instructor's name, as available, is also included.

115. Introduction to Economics
ECON 115 or 225 or 123 or 223. An introduction to economics with emphasis on the nature and method of economics, national income and its determinants, fluctuations in national income, money and credit, fiscal and monetary policy, and alternative views of the economy.

123. Principles of Economics I
(3-0-3) Staff
An introduction to economics with emphasis on the nature and method of economics, national income and its determinants, fluctuations in national income, money and credit, fiscal and monetary policies, and economic growth.

180. Social Science University Seminar
(3-0-3) Staff
Economics sections will deal with different aspects of economic analysis and policy issues. The focus will be on understanding how economists think about theoretical issues and how they apply their analytical tools to real-world economic problems and policies. No background in economics is assumed. The seminars will satisfy the University and College of Arts and Letters social science requirements in addition to the University seminar requirement.

223. Principles of Economics I
(3-0-3) Staff
An introduction to economics with emphasis on the nature and method of economics, national income and its determinants, fluctuations in national income, money and credit, fiscal and monetary policies and economic growth. Not open to students who have taken ECON 123.

224. Principles of Economics II
(3-0-3) Staff
An introduction to economics, with particular attention to the pricing mechanism, competitive and monopolistic markets, government regulation of the economy, labor-management relations and programs, income determination and public policy, foreign trade and the international economy. Not open to first-year students.

225. Introduction to Economics
(3-0-3) Staff
A one-semester survey of micro- and macroeconomics, national income, fiscal and monetary policy, supply and demand, stabilization policy and alternative views of the economy. Not open to students who have taken ECON 115.

301. Intermediate Economic Theory — Micro
ECON 115 or 225 or 123 or 223. An examination of the language and analytical tools of microeconomics, emphasizing the functional relationship between the factor and product markets and resource allocation.

302. Intermediate Economic Theory — Macro
ECON 115 or 225 or 123 or 223. An intensive examination of macroeconomics, with particular reference to the determination of economic growth, national income, employment, and the general price level.

303. Statistics for Economists
ECON 115 or 225 or 123 or 223. An examination of the language and analytical tools of microeconomics, emphasizing the functional relationship between the factor and product markets and resource allocation.

305. Philosophy of Economics
ECON 115 or 225 or 123 or 223 or 224.
What does it mean to do good research in economics? If you thought the answer to this question was straightforward, you will be in for a surprise! The intention of the course is to problematize such notions as “prediction is the goal of economics” or “there is progress in economics” or “assumptions in economics should be (un)realistic.” To do this, we will explore literature on philosophy of science, sociology of scientific knowledge, and economic theory.
306. History of Modern Economic Thought (3-0-3) Mirowski, Sent
The problems of the construction of a scientific discipline of economics are surveyed from the Physiocrats to the early 20th century. Particular emphasis is placed upon the theories of value, production and distribution. While the major stress will focus upon the history of classical political economy and neoclassical economics, some attention will also be given to the German Historicism and American Institutionalists schools. The course relies upon a mixture of primary texts and secondary sources.

307. Seminar in the History of Economic Thought (3-0-3) Mitrowski, Ruccio, Sent
Each seminar is devoted to a specific topic in methodology and the history of economic thought. Examples include the problem of measurement errors, economics and natural images, postmodernism and economics, Keynes and the Bloomsbury Group, feminist criticisms of "economic man," and the role of the gift in economic thought. All seminars involve extensive reading, writing, and independent research. Graduate students and undergraduate students outside economics are encouraged to enroll, with permission from the instructor.

310. Economics, Ethics, and Public Policy (3-0-3) Staff
Prerequisite: ECON 115 or 225 or 224.
A study of the interaction of economics and ethics, both in economic theory and economic policy. Focus will be on selected economic issues, employment policy, international trade policy, etc. Theoretical issues will include process vs. ends, etc. The course will compare orthodox views with non-traditional approaches to economic problems are being addressed in selected areas of the country as well as in South Bend. The South Bend Heritage Foundation (SBHF) will act as a client organization for this course by posing research questions for students to investigate during the last third of the semester. The SBHF is a private, nonprofit service and community development corporation dedicated to the stabilization, enhancement, and empowerment of South Bend's inner-city neighborhoods.

315. Introduction to Political Economy (3-0-3) Ghirarducci, Ruccio
Prerequisite: ECON 115 or 225, or 224.
An introduction to theoretical frameworks, economic policies, and social factors often downplayed or ignored in mainstream economics. Topics include alternative theories of political economy, the relationship between economics and politics and the analysis of institutions.

333. Justice Seminar (3-0-3) Staff
The Justice Seminar undertakes a critical examination of major theories of justice, both the deontological (e.g., contract theory) and teleological (e.g., utilitarian and virtue-based theories). This is the core course for the concentration in Philosophy, Politics, and Economics (PPE).

334. Topics in Political Economy (3-0-3) Ghirarducci, Wolfson
Seminar course concerned with policy problems such as unemployment, inflation, growth, balance of payments and income distribution. Alternative methods of analysis and policy prescriptions are discussed. Orthodox views are studied and compared to nontraditional approaches to the analysis of the United States and other advanced economies.

335. Economics of Poverty (3-0-3) Warlick
Prerequisites: ECON 115 or 225 or 123 or 223 or 224.
An examination of the extent and causes of poverty in the United States. The current system of government programs to combat poverty is analyzed. Reforms of this system are also considered.

337. Economics of Education (3-0-3) Warlick
Prerequisite: ECON 115 or 225 or 224.
This course reviews economic literature addressing current educational issues in America, including the adequacy of our K-12 public school system, the effectiveness of market-based reforms (vouchers and charter schools) and administered forms of accountability (standardized testing). We also examine the rate of return to additional years of education (how much education should individuals undertake?), access to higher education, financial aid systems, and options to offset the rising cost of higher education.

340. Introduction to Public Policy (3-0-3) Betson
This course focuses on the policy process from the perspective of both the policymaker and analyst of policy. To achieve these two perspectives, this course will make substantial use of case studies of public policy problems and decisions. Among the subjects of these case studies will be the areas of tax reform, social welfare and defense.

345. Industrial Organization (3-0-3) Mui, Warlick
Prerequisite: ECON 115 or 225 or 224.
Introduces the student to economic thinking about the role of industry organization in economic performance. Traditional economic thinking that oligopolistic industry structures lead to poor performance is contrasted to theories which suggest that such organization may under some circumstances lead to superior performance. The two perspectives are used to evaluate the relative performance of U.S. and Japanese industries.

350. Labor Economics (3-0-3) Ghirarducci
Prerequisite: ECON 115 or 225 or 224.
A survey course covering the economics of employment and unemployment; wages and income distribution; poverty, education and discrimination; unions and labor and industrial relations systems; and comparative labor systems.

Prerequisite: ECON 115 or 225 or 224.
This community-based learning and research course examines the political economy of U.S. inner-city revitalization, with South Bend as a case study. Community-based learning (CBL) requires that students both learn and apply what they are learning within a setting outside the classroom. In addition to in-class seminar sessions, CBL activities will include meetings with local organizations that link public agencies and private enterprise, visits to varied businesses in urban South Bend, and meetings with area government representatives and relevant church and neighborhood organizations. During the first third of the semester, students will learn about the central problems of the U.S. city and their roots, viewing the issues firsthand locally. In the second third, they will study how inner-city problems are being addressed in selected areas of the country as well as in South Bend. The South Bend Heritage Foundation (SBHF) will act as a client organization for this course by posing research questions for students to investigate during the last third of the semester. The SBHF is a private, nonprofit service and community development corporation dedicated to the stabilization, enhancement, and empowerment of South Bend’s inner-city neighborhoods.

404. Topics in Applied Microeconomics (3-0-3) Rakowski, Mui
Prerequisite: ECON 301.
This course applies microeconomic analysis to understand a selection of policy-related issues. The topics chosen will vary from semester to semester, but there will be a coverage of issues highlighted in current policy debates. Examples of topics are distributive effects of taxes, the effects of minimum wages, health insurance, immigration, trade policy.
405. Consumption and Happiness
(3-0-3) Dutt
Prerequisite: 301 or 302 or permission of instructor.

We live in an age in which consumption in many parts of the world has increased to unprecedented levels and continues to rise. Many people take it for granted that this increase in consumption is a good thing because it increases human happiness. But others are more skeptical, arguing that increasing consumption has adverse consequences on the poor, the environment, and future growth; that it results in moral deprivation; and that it does not even make those who consume more any happier. This course critically examines this debate, which relates to all of us as consumers, using the tools of economic analysis.

408. Game Theory and Strategic Analysis
(3-0-3) Mui
Prerequisite: MATH 104 or equivalent, MATH 105 or equivalent, ECON 301 or permission of instructor.

The objective of this course is to help students develop a good understanding of the basic concepts in game theory and learn how to employ these concepts to better understand strategic interactions. Topics will include normal form games, extensive form games, pure and mixed strategies, Nash Equilibrium, subgame perfect equilibrium, repeated games, and introduction to games of incomplete information. Selected applications will include competition and collusion in oligopoly, entry deterrence, political competition and rent seeking, social norms and strategic interaction.

413. Marxian Economic Theory
(3-0-3) Ruccio
Prerequisite: ECON 115 or 225 or 224.

An introduction to Marxian economic analysis. Topics include the differences between mainstream and Marxian economics, general philosophy and methodology, Marxian value theory, and critical appraisals and current relevance of Marx’s “critique of political economy.”

414. Beyond Economic Man
(3-0-3) Ruccio, Sent

The aim of this course is to explore the presence and effects of feminist theory in contemporary economics. We begin by examining some of the basic themes and concepts of feminist theory and the debates surrounding the history of feminism in relation to economics. Then we look at the impact that feminist theory is having on contemporary discussions in economics, especially the idea that mainstream economics is a gendered discourse. Finally, we examine some of the implications of the feminist critique of economic theory in specific areas such as the household, labor, industrial policies and Third World development.

416. Problems in Political Economy
(3-0-3) Wolfson
Prerequisite: ECON 115 or 225 or 123 or 223 or 224.

A seminar course concerned with policy problems such as poverty, unemployment, quality of worklife, energy and the environment, corporate power, military power and discrimination. Alternative policy prescriptions and methods of analysis are discussed. Orthodox, conservative and liberal views are studied and later compared with nontraditional approaches to the analysis of American capitalism and its institutional modifications.

421. Money, Credit, and Banking
(3-0-3) Bonello, Wolfson
Prerequisite: ECON 302.

An examination of the money and credit-supply processes and the role of money and credit in the economy. Topics include financial intermediaries, financial markets, the changing regulatory environment, monetary policy and international monetary arrangements.

422. The Financial System
(3-0-3) Wolfson
Prerequisite: ECON 115 or 225 or 123 or 223 or 224.

An examination of the functioning of the U.S. financial system, both domestically and internationally. The emphasis will be on understanding current developments in historical context. Examples of topics include financial crises; financial innovation and deregulation; the changing roles of commercial banks, investment banks, and savings and loan associations; the evolution of the international monetary system; and the implications of corporate and government debt.

430. The New Urban Crisis: An Economic Analysis
(3-0-3) Swartz
Prerequisite: ECON 301 or 303.

The purpose of this seminar/lecture course is to introduce class participants to a series of economic problems and issues surrounding the public finance of urban America. In our federal system of government, which is undergoing a radical transformation through devolution, fiscal responsibility is primarily the concern of state and local governments. Thus, this course will focus on this often neglected area of state and local public finance.

Class participants are expected to generate an original research product. The focus of this research product varies from semester to semester. Some issues considered in the past have been (1) “working and poor in urban America,” (2) “the collapse of urban commercial and residential property markets and the resulting impact on property taxation” and (3) “the changing face of fiscal federalism.”
433. Mathematics for Economists
(3-0-3) Dutt, Lee, Mukhopadhyay
Prerequisite: ECON 301 or ECON 302 or permission of instructor.
Exposition of mathematical methods used in economic theory and analysis, with application of these methods to economic theory. Major methods covered include differential and integral calculus and matrix algebra. Recommended for students planning to go to graduate school in economics.

434. Applied Econometrics
(3-0-3) Lee
Prerequisite: ECON 301 or permission of instructor.
This course introduces the statistical and econometric methods using the least squares estimation method in empirical economic applications. It is oriented toward the practical applications of economic theory with econometric methods rather than the theoretical development of these subjects. Emphasis will be placed on the analysis of economic problems such as the capital asset pricing model, wage discrimination, and the married women workforce participation decision issues.

435. Law and Economics
(3-0-3) Skurski
Prerequisite: ECON 301.
An introduction to the use of economic methods for the analysis of legal rules and decisions. Emphasis will be in applications. Much of the course material will come from cases. A variety of subjects, such as torts, contracts, and labor law, will be covered. Students are not presumed to have any legal knowledge.

441. Public Budget Expenditure Policy
(3-0-3) Betson
Prerequisite: ECON 301.
This course will introduce students to normative and positive economic theories of the role of governmental agencies in the economy, privatization and the role of nonprofits; discussion of what level of government should undertake collective action (fiscal federalism); examination of the level and composition of our federal and local governments' budgets as well as the current budgeting process; cost-benefit analysis, theoretical and pragmatic practices; and the impact of governmental rules and regulations on the economy.

442. Tax Policy
(3-0-3) Betson
Prerequisite: ECON 301.
This course will introduce students to the following topics: description of alternative tax instruments; historical trends of tax policies of the federal and state governments; discussion of what would be a "good" tax and criteria for choosing among different taxes; theoretical analysis of taxes on household and business decisions; empirical evidence of the distribution and efficiency consequences of different taxes; debt and deficits.

443. The Economics of Industrial Organization
(3-0-3) Warlick
Prerequisite: ECON 301 or 302.
An investigation into the structure of American industry and an analysis of the implications of corporate economic power for public welfare.

446. Environmental Economics
(3-0-3) Jensen
Prerequisite: 115 or 225 or 224.
An analysis of the welfare economics of environmental problems, emphasizing market failures due to negative environmental externalities. Air, water, and land pollution are classic examples of these externalities, which occur when third parties bear costs resulting from the transactions of the two primary market participants. The theory and practice of environmental policy to promote efficiency at the U.S. local, state, and federal levels and in other countries is explored. International problems such as transboundary pollution and global warming are also studied.

447. Seminar in Health Care Policy
(3-0-3) Betson
Prerequisite: ECON 301 or permission of instructor.
What has caused the dramatic rise in health care expenditures? Are we getting our money's worth from our health care dollar? Who is paying the bills? Is the health care system equitable? In this seminar we will attempt to answer these questions from not only an economic perspective but also from a historical and political perspective.

448. Seminar in Current Economic Policy
(3-0-3) Betson
Prerequisite: ECON 301, 302 and 303 or equivalent.
The purpose of the seminar is to discuss current economic policy issues. Students will be required to read newspapers (Wall Street Journal, New York Times) on a daily basis and be prepared to discuss the economics of what was in the newspapers. Periodically throughout the semester, the students will write one- to two-page critiques of the coverage of an issue they found in the newspaper and will write a major paper on a current issue and make a presentation in the seminar.

449. Seminar in Policy Evaluation
(3-0-3) Warlick
Prerequisite: ECON 303 or equivalent.
Nontraditional seminar in which students collectively analyze a current policy issue relevant to St. Joseph County, Indiana. The majority of the semester is spent outside the classroom. Research activities include conducting interviews, data collection and report writing.

450. Labor Relations Law
(3-0-3) Lee
Prerequisite: Permission of instructor.
Analysis of the practice and procedures of arbitration in labor grievances, with emphasis on rights and interest issues in both public- and private-sector employment. Course stresses an analysis of arbitral awards.

(3-0-3) Lee
A case approach using primarily U.S. Supreme Court cases of the various federal laws that are encountered in personnel management. The course will cover the impact of law in such areas of the personnel function as recruitment and selection of employees, training, promotion, affirmative action, testing, evaluation, wages, fringe benefits and safety and health.

453. Collective Bargaining: The Private Sector
(3-0-3) Lee
An analysis of the procedures and economic implications of collective bargaining as it now operates in the United States. Emphasizes a game theory approach resulting in the negotiation of a labor contract.

454. Collective Bargaining: The Public Sector
(3-0-3) Lee
This course will examine the relevant state and federal laws covering public-sector collective bargaining. It will examine the various issues and techniques covering collective bargaining in government. The major part of this course will be a game theory approach in which an actual contract will be bargained.

455. Topics in Labor
(3-0-3) Ghilarducci
Topics vary with instructors and current trends. Examples include employment and earnings experiences of professional and managerial employees, new managerial systems, incentive and compensation systems, the health care crisis, the decline of unions, poverty and working poor, and labor market regulations.

457. Economics of Gender and Ethnic Discrimination
(3-0-3) Ghilarducci
Women and ethnic minorities have the lowest incomes, worst jobs and highest levels of unemployment and poverty in the United States today. This course examines the role of racism and sexism in the U.S. economy.

458. Labor Arbitration
(3-0-3) Lee
Prerequisite: Permission of instructor.
Analysis of the practice and procedures of arbitration in labor grievances, with emphasis on rights and interest issues in both public- and private-sector employment. Course stresses an analysis of arbitral awards.
465. Stabilization Policy
(3-0-3) Ros
Prerequisite: ECON 302.
An in-depth examination of the various actions that have been and may be used to achieve the macroeconomic objectives of economic growth, full employment, and price stability. The actions include monetary and fiscal policy, wage and price controls, and other types of income policies. The actions are compared at both the theoretical level and in terms of the results obtained in the past. Although the primary focus is on the United States, the student will be exposed to policies and experiences of other countries.

471. International Economics
(3-0-3) Kim, Rakowski
Prerequisites: ECON 115 or 225 or 123 or 223 or 224.
A study of the general theory of international trade; the pattern of trade, gains from trade, tariffs, trade and special interest groups, trade and growth, foreign exchange markets, balance-of-payment problems and plans for monetary reform.

472. International Trade
(3-0-3) Dutt, Kim, Rakowski
Prerequisite: ECON 301 or equivalent.
This course examines major theoretical, empirical and institutional issues in the study of international trade and international factor movements. The topics covered include determinants of trade patterns, trade and welfare, commercial policy, trade and growth, customs unions, international capital and labor movements, and trade and development.

473. International Money
(3-0-3) Kim, Ros
Prerequisite: ECON 302 or equivalent.
This course examines major institutional changes in the international financial system, theoretical developments in the field of international monetary economics, and policy issues in the contemporary global financial market. Topics include balance-of-payments accounts, exchange rate markets and systems, open-economy macroeconomics, international debt, and contemporary international monetary and financial arrangements.

481. History of Economic Development
(3-0-3) Ruccio
Prerequisite: ECON 115 or 225 or 224.
This course focuses on the history of modern capitalist and socialist development around the world. Particular emphasis will be given to the history of economic development in Latin America. Both theoretical models and historical cases will be studied.

484. Economic Development of Latin America
(3-0-3) Bartell
Prerequisite: ECON 115 or 225 or 123 or 223 or 224.
An examination of the roots of dependence in Latin America. An analysis of the key problems of economic development and the policies prescribed for their solution.

489. Regional Economic Development
(3-0-3) Leahy
Prerequisite: ECON 115 or 225 or 123 or 223 or 224.
An analysis of regional economic problems in the United States and selected European countries, with a focus on regional theory, methods of regional analysis and pertinent development programs.

490. Econometrics
(3-0-3) Lee, March, Mukhopadhyay
Prerequisite: ECON 303 or permission of instructor.
Provides students with an understanding of when and how to use basic econometric methods in their work as economists, including the ability to recognize which econometric technique is appropriate in a given situation as well as what explicit and implicit assumptions are being made using the method. Topics covered include estimation and hypothesis testing using basic regression analysis, problems with basic regression analysis, alternative econometric methods, limited dependent variables and simultaneous equation models.

398. Special Studies: Readings and Research
(3-0-3) Staff
Prerequisite: Junior standing, dean’s list average and written consent of instructor.
Independent study under the direction of a faculty member. Course requirements may include substantial writing as determined by the director. The director will disenroll a student early for failure to meet course requirements. Students who have been disenrolled or who have failed at the end of the first semester are disqualified for Special Studies in the following term.

495. Senior Honors Essay I and II
(3-0-3) (3-0-3) Staff
Senior economics majors only.
A two-semester tutorial requiring a completed essay on a selected topic in economics in depth. The John Harold Sheehan Prize Essay Award with an inscribed plaque is awarded by the Department of Economics to the graduating senior who has written the best Senior Honors Essay. Senior economics majors only.

498. Special Studies: Readings and Research
(3-0-3) Staff
Prerequisite: Senior standing, dean’s list average and written consent of instructor.
See above.
Program of Studies. The Department of English offers its majors a variety of courses in language and literature. The offerings include courses in the several periods of British literature from medieval to modern times, in American literature from colonial to modern times, in certain aspects of classical and European literature, and in other literatures written in English; in the genres of literature, in major authors, in rhetorical, linguistic and literary theory, and in expository and creative writing. All courses taught in the department, not just those designated as writing courses, contain significant writing components. All majors also take a research seminar that emphasizes intensive writing.

The English major at Notre Dame studies the English language both as it has been used by skilled artists and as it can be used by the student. Precisely how the study proceeds is a matter of continuing decision by the student major.

The department, then, makes available a wide variety of courses, encouraging each major to develop a program of selections suitable to his or her desires and needs; each major is assigned a faculty advisor to assist in this planning. The English major is thus able to select from a broad spectrum of possible combinations in designing a comprehensive education in the humanities. Of course, each major will vary his or her program to select courses appropriate to individual postcollege plans which might include careers in, e.g., education, business, journalism, government service or a graduate degree in business, law school, medical or dental school, graduate study for an M.A., M.F.A., or Ph.D., or some less overtly vocational notion or purpose.

The requirements for the English major include: a minimum total of 10 courses (30 credit hours) in addition to the courses required by the college (two first-year courses and one literature course). The total credit hours must include three courses (nine credit hours) in British and American Literary Traditions and seven other courses (21 credit hours) at the 400- or 500-level including a one-semester course designated “Methods” early in the major and a one-semester course designated “Seminar” in English.

Course Descriptions. The following course descriptions give the number and title of each course. Lecture hours per week, laboratory, and/or tutorial hours per week and credits each semester are in parentheses. The instructor’s name is also included. For fuller descriptions and recent additions to course offerings, consult the department course description booklet for the current semester, or the Department’s Web site, www.nd.edu/-english.

The department. The Department of Film, Television, and Theatre curriculum includes study of the arts of theatre and performance, film, video, and television. Our goal is to provide students with intellectual and intuitive resources for analysis and production of these performing and media arts. We seek both to encourage and inspire intellectual discipline and curiosity as well as to discover and nurture student creativity. We offer, therefore, a scholarly and creative context for education of the general liberal arts student at Notre Dame as well as the individual seeking an intensive preparation for advanced study in these fields. In an interdisciplinary spirit of collaboration, students in this department investigate film, television, and theatre (and occasionally other media) as complex cultural phenomena in order to develop skills in analysis, evaluation, and theory formation as well as to engage in creative production.

Students graduating from this department have numerous postgraduate choices. Many of our graduates seek careers in law, medicine, business, education, public service, or other professions. Others will pursue careers in theatre, film, or television. However, we are not a professional training program. Rather, we seek to provide the creative and technological tools for student scholars/artists to build a basis for advanced study and professional careers in the arts should they so desire. It is our hope that those whose work and determination lead them to seek careers in these fields will be challenged and assisted by their liberal arts curriculum. Our courses provide tools to understand the analytical, technical and imaginative processes of the field, whether pursued as future work, study, or as an enhancement of intellectual life.

Most FTT courses fulfill the University fine arts requirement.

For more information and up-to-date listings of courses and FTT events, visit the Web at www.nd.edu/~ftt.

Program of Studies. In 1998, all COTH courses became FTT. Students interested in the major are encouraged to visit the department office (314 O’Shaughnessy Hall) for information about the programs and department faculty. You also may visit our Web site at www.nd.edu/~ftt. It is recommended that interested students complete one of the freshman/sophomore basic courses, Basics of Film and Television (FTT 104/204) or Introduction to Theatre (FTT 105/205), before selecting the major. These courses are essential introductions to the subjects and methodologies of the two departmental concentrations, as well as prerequisites for most departmental courses. When taking either course is impossible, instructors of the courses may approve students for concurrent registration.

Step-by-step instructions for becoming a major are available on our Web site. All students declaring a major first must obtain the signature of the department chair or associate chair and select a departmental faculty advisor, with whom the student will consult to prepare a plan of study reflecting their educational interests and goals. Students may elect to major in the department as either a first or second major in accordance with college guidelines.

Normally, students concentrate in either Film/Television or in Theatre. At least 30 credit hours are needed to complete the major. The Film/Television concentration requires at least one elective on an international subject and at least three upper-level courses. The Theatre concentration offers a supplementary major requiring 24 credit hours, at least three of which must be at the 400 level, depending on the choice of concentration. The Film/Television concentration requires at least one elective on an international subject, and the department requires writing throughout the curriculum.

(A major combining courses from both areas of the department is possible with approval of the department chair.)
The Department of Film, Television, and Theatre participates in two international programs by cross-listing courses and sponsoring internships. For more information, see the Bulletin descriptions for the Dublin program and the London program.

Several courses are offered in the summer session, including FTT 104/204 and 105/205. See the Summer Session Bulletin for availability and further information.

Film/Television Concentration. The unifying element in the Film/Television Concentration of the department is the four-course fundamentals requirement, which provides students not only with resources for the critical examination of form, style, and meaning of the media in contemporary culture but also a theoretical foundation for intensive hands-on production experience.

Summary of Requirements: Basics of Film and Television (FTT 104/204), History of Film I (FTT 310), History of Film II (FTT 311), Film and Television Theory (FTT 377). In addition to these four courses, students must elect six courses from among the many offerings of the department in the areas of film and television studies, film and television production, theatre and other media studies for a total of at least 30 hours. At least three hours must be taken on an international topic. See advisors and the Web site for specific offerings. Normally, three of these electives must be at the 400 level (not including internships).

Theatre Concentration. The Theatre Concentration requires students to obtain a broad general education in all areas of theatre study — history, theory, and production. Students may focus their studies in selected areas by choosing electives in their particular areas of interest.

Summary of Requirements: Introduction to Theatre (FTT 105/205), Stage Management (FTT 241), Theatre Seminar (FTT 494). Plus two of the following three courses: Scene Design and Methodology (FTT 360), Lighting Design and Methodology (FTT 365), Costume Design and Methodology (FTT 364). Plus three of the following four courses: History of Theatre Before 1700 (FTT 411), History of Theatre Since 1700 (FTT 413), Dramatic Literature and Criticism Before 1900 (FTT 482), Dramatic Literature and Criticism Since 1900 (FTT 483). Plus two other courses within the department, selected in consultation with an advisor, for a total of at least 30 hours.

Students selecting the Theatre Concentration as a supplementary major may do so by completing only the eight core requirements.

Complementary Nature of Departmental Concentrations. There is a strong creative and scholarly relationship in the mix of courses and activities of the department of which students should be aware. The concentrations offered by this department can provide many complementary areas of creative and technical study for students involved in film and television production, as well as overlapping historical, theoretical and critical concerns. Similarly, those concentrating in theatre are urged to avail themselves of the many opportunities for production experience and critical, cultural and theoretical studies offered by the film and television faculty.

Co-curricular Activities: The department encourages non-majors to elect courses, participate as audience in our extensive film and theatre series, and involve themselves in film, television and theatre production as a means of informing and complementing their liberal arts education at Notre Dame. Occasional guest artists and lecturers are also sponsored by the department. Information on all department-sponsored activities is available in the department office and on the department’s Web site.

Course Descriptions. The following course descriptions give the number and title of each course. Lecture hours per week, laboratory hours per week and credits each semester are in parentheses. The instructor’s name is also included. Many courses require completion of prerequisite courses, early application and/or permission prior to registration in order to assure the student’s readiness to take the course and to control numbers in the class. Students should discuss their interests and clarify course registration requirements with the course instructors and/or their advisors. Virtually all courses in this department require attendance at cinema screenings (labs), plays and other arts events.

104/204. Basics of Film and Television (3-2-3) Staff Corequisite: FTT 104L/204L
This course introduces students to the study of film and television, with particular emphasis on narrative. Students will learn to analyze audio-visual form, including editing, framing, mise-en-scène, and sound. Students will consider topics in film and television studies such as authorship, genre, star, and feminism. Focusing on Classical Hollywood and American TV, the course will also introduce students to international and/or alternative cinemas and television styles. Evening screenings are required. Serves as prerequisite to most upper-level courses in film and television.

105/205. Introduction to Theatre (3-2-3) Staff
A study of theatre viewed from three perspectives: historical, literary and contemporary production practices. Through lectures, readings and discussion, students will study this art form and understand its relevance to their own life as well as to other art forms. A basic understanding of the history of theatre and the recognition of the duties and responsibilities of the personnel involved in producing live theatre performances will allow students to become more objective in their own theatre experiences.

215. American Film Genres (3-2-3) Staff
Corequisite: FTT 215L
This course explores the ways in which Hollywood has developed productions in waves and cycles of films with similar subjects and styles. In addition to exploring the idea of genre itself as a critical issue, there are case studies of specific groups of films. These include the traditional American genres, e.g., gangster films, westerns and musicals, as well as lesser-known genres, which vary each year.

221. Acting: Process (3-0-3) Scott, Staff
Prerequisite: FTT 105/205.
This is a basic introduction to the art and craft of acting. It is a workshop course including lecture, exercises, rehearsal techniques and scene study. The emphasis is on development and growth and not on finished work. In addition, students are required to see the mainstage plays and keep a journal incorporating notes on class work, rehearsals and outside reading.

228. Irish and American Tap Dance (1.5-0-1.5) McKenna
This course will teach a range of fundamental American tap steps in addition to at least two finished tap dance pieces set to music. Several hard shoe Irish tap dances will be taught, and depending on the ability of the students, several other completed dances are possible. The particular range of individual tap dances learned will permit the student to use these steps and expand them to fit a wide diversity of music types and rhythms. Although the class is intended for students who have never learned tap previously, both elementary and middle-range students have found the class suited to their needs. Tap shoes are a necessity and should be purchased before the class begins.

Does not fulfill the fine arts requirement.
229. Ballet I
(3-0-1.5) Barkes
Ballet I is an exploration of fundamental ballet technique. It is an activity course that is heavily dependent upon attendance. The course will be geared toward those who have had little or no ballet training, with the intention of getting the class moving quickly enough that those with some training will find it useful. Ballet, if pursued correctly, can be a great help to those who engage in other movement activities. While it is a stylized form, ballet fundamentals can provide a solid foundation for actors, athletes, and even normal pedestrians. For example, good ballet placement is also good posture. For the first class, dress comfortably and be ready to move. The only monetary investment for the course is a pair of ballet shoes, which may be purchased at The Ballet Shop in the nearby Town and Country Shopping Center.

Does not fulfill the fine arts requirement.

230. Performance Workshop I
(3-2-3) Chalmers
Corequisite: FTT 230L.
This class represents an exciting new venture for Notre Dame theater, introducing students to the alternative practices of performance art and performance theater. Bringing together painters, video artists, musicians, and writers (among others), performance has emphasized modernist and avant-garde experimentation. The work of these and other artists are studied through readings and film and video documentation. Students also will be asked to use these examples as models to create a series of their own short performance pieces. Students at all levels and disciplines are encouraged to enroll. A background in theater is not required—only a spirit of collaboration and openness toward alternative uses of character, text, space, lighting, and sound.

241. Stage Management
(3-0-3) Dreyer
Prerequisite: FTT 105/205 or permission.
This course will explore the duties and functions of the stage manager in both the pre-production and production phases of the mounting of a show. Students will learn how to produce a promptbook and to track and block a show. They will also learn performance etiquette and documentation of a production.

260. Introduction to New Media
(3-0-3) Staff
The Internet, interactive computer technologies, and unprecedented ways of performing and expressing ideas make an awareness of new media (broadly defined) necessary. This course examines the history, application, and social impact of these new systems.

300. Principles of Television and Multimedia Production
(3-0-3) Friedewald
This course is designed to provide a fundamental understanding of video and multimedia program production, from initial concept to final broadcast. The point of view is from the perspective of the executive producer, who oversees all business and creative aspects of television programs. All media which incorporate video, including broadcast television, CD-ROM, DVD and the Internet, will be covered. Topics include proposal development and budgets; understanding the target audience; audience exposure, attention, perception and retention; production elements; locations; the script; sponsor relations; credibility and ethics; motivational television; and on-camera interview techniques.

301. History of Television
(3-0-3) Becker
Corequisite: FTT 301L. Majors only through third period; then open to all.
This course examines the historical evolution of television, focusing on the industrial, political, technological, and cultural forces that have shaped the development of the medium in the United States and abroad. In addition to analyzing the history of American broadcasting, we cover the histories of other television systems, including those of Great Britain, China, Latin America, and the Middle East. As such, we explore the variety of forms this ubiquitous mass medium has taken on across the globe and investigate the historical factors that bought about those forms.

308. Broadcast Journalism
(3-0-3) Sieber
Prerequisite: By application only.
Four major topics are covered: (1) Writing for broadcast: Emphasis on developing the student’s understanding of grammar and style in the construction of effective news stories. (2) Newscast structure: Understanding what does in today’s broadcast newscast and how economics affects the flow of information. (3) Journalism ethics: Analysis of personal values, ethical principles, and journalistic duties that influence newscast decisions. (4) Legal considerations in news gathering with special attention paid to libel laws and invasion of privacy.

310. History of Film I
(3-2-3) Crafon
Corequisite: FTT 104/204.
This course traces the major developments within the history of U.S. and international cinema from its beginnings to 1946. It will look at films from the major cinematic movements and genres and from major filmmakers. These films and filmmakers will be considered in terms of the social, economic, technological and aesthetic forces that have shaped them.

311. History of Film II
(3-2-3) Becker, Collins
Prerequisite: FTT 310 or consent of instructor.
Corequisite: FTT 311L.
This course is a continuation of FTT 310, examining the most important developments in world cinema from 1946 to the present.

317. History of Popular Culture
(3-2-3) Collins
Prerequisite: FTT 104/204.
Corequisite: FTT 317L.
The focus of this course is a consideration of the development of popular culture through a re-investigation of its history and place within the past and present cultures. Novels and other print media are considered, as well as film and television.

322. Acting: Character
(3-0-3) Scott
Prerequisite: FTT 105/205 or 221 or permission.
The second course in the acting progression, this course expands on basic methodology and incorporates physical techniques for building a character. Students explore psychological gestures, Laban effort shapes, and improvisation as they develop a personal approach to creating a role.

325. Acting: Role/Modern
(3-0-3) Staff
Prerequisite: FTT 221 or permission.
Advanced exploration of technique and methodology focusing on problem solving in approaching roles from the literature of the modern theatre.

326. Acting: Role/Classical
(3-0-3) Scott
Prerequisite: FTT 221 or permission.
This course looks at Shakespeare’s texts from the actors’ perspective. Various techniques for unlocking meaning and emotional content will be introduced. Students will use the First Folio for textual analysis and explore the fine arts in Elizabethan England to discover the physical world of Shakespeare’s characters. The course culminates in a series of vignettes allowing each student to create several different classical roles.

327. Acting: Role/Contemporary
(3-0-3) Staff
Prerequisites: FTT 221 or permission.
Advanced exploration of technique and methodology focusing on problem solving in approaching roles from the literature of the contemporary theatre.

328. Voice and Movement
(3-0-3) Scott
Prerequisites: FTT 105/205 and 221.
A course designed to help the advanced acting student focus on kinesthetic awareness. The actor will identify and work to remove physical and vocal tensions which cause habituated movement and impede natural sound production. Through movement and vocal exercises created for actors, students will experience what “prepared readiness” for the stage consists of, and how to meet the demands of a live performance.
330. Advanced Tap and Choreography (3-0-3) McKenna
Does not apply to overload.
This class is directed toward advanced dance students interested in creating and performing advanced tap techniques and choreographing, with the instructor or, in some cases, independently. Tap pieces covering a range of tap genres, including Latin hard shoe step dancing, are included.

334A. National Cinemas (3-0-3) Auerbach
Corequisite: FTT 334L.
Every industrialized country, and many nonindustrialized ones, have developed distinctive national cinemas. Often these productions are a dynamic mix of Hollywood influences, assertive local cultures, and government control. This course examines the films of one or more countries to reveal their distinctive styles, stories, and visual and narrative techniques. (The nationality varies each year.) The idea of “nation” as a critical concept is also addressed. Satisfies the FTT “International Area” requirement for Film/TV concentrators. May be repeated. Fulfills the University fine arts requirement and the Film/TV international area requirement.

335. National Theatre (3-0-3) Staff
This course provides students with insight into the development of European theatre, from Brecht-Weigel’s work at the Berliner Ensemble to the theatre works of Giorgio Strehler at the Piccolo (Italy), Peter Brook at the Buffs de Nord (UK, France), Ariane Mnouchkine at Theatre de Soleil (France), Peter Stein at the Schaubuhne, Pina Bausch at Tanztheater Wuppertal, and Heiner Müller and Einar Schleef at the Volksbuehne and Bausch at Tanztheater Wuppertal, and Heiner (France), Peter Stein at the Schaubeuhne, Pina (Italy), Peter Brook at the Buffes de Nord (UK, theatre works of Giorgio Strehler at the Piccolo (Italy), Peter Brook at the Buffs de Nord (UK, France), Ariane Mnouchkine at Theatre de Soleil (France), Peter Stein at the Schaubuhne, Pina Bausch at Tanztheater Wuppertal, and Heiner Müller and Einar Schleef at the Volksbuehne and the Berlin Ensemble (Germany). Students are introduced to the main productions of these directors, their theatrical roots, and their influence on contemporary European theater and playwriting.

344. Directing: Process (3-0-3) Staff
Prerequisite: FTT 105/205 or permission.
All aspects of directing a play will be analyzed and discussed including working with text, space, actor, and audience. There will be three exercises staged in class. Each student will direct a one-act play and submit a full detailed promptbook of that production as a final project for the course. All work for the final is outside regular class time.

350. Love, Death, Revenge: Japanese Drama (3-0-3)
An introduction to Japanese classical theater (Noh, Kyogen, Bunraku and Kabuki) through readings and videotapes of selected plays.

351. Playwriting and Screenwriting (3-2-3) Pilkinton
Prerequisite: Majors only; non-majors require the instructor’s permission, because of the limited enrollment.
This creative-writing course deals with the principles of dramatic construction with consideration of character development, plot structure, dialogue and critical analysis, as well as the evolution of dramatic form into cinematic narrative. Students can choose to work in either (or both) formats, that is, theatre or film. Students will develop plays or screenplays appropriate for later production within the department and will analyze and evaluate each other’s creative work. Screenings and play performances outside class are required. Advanced students only.

355. Topics in Performance Studies (3-0-3) Chalmers
This course introduces students to performance studies, a new interdisciplinary field. This class will explore the meanings of “performativity” as it has been applied by scholars of performance studies to events both in and outside theater. We will begin by looking at leading critic’s work on ritual and theater. Next, these founding concepts, developed in an academic context, will be discussed in relation to the practice of performance art and experimental theater since the late 1950s.

360. Scene Design and Methodology (3-0-3) Auerbach
Prerequisite: FTT 105/205 or permission.
An introduction to the theories and practice of scenic design for the stage. Students will explore the design process as well as study the practical considerations of the execution of a design. Specific topics covered will include elements of design, drafting, construction techniques, model building and rendering. Various periods and styles will be explored along with the role of the designer within the artistic infrastructure and play analysis from the designer’s point of view.

361. Introduction to Film and Video Production (3-3-4) Mandell
Prerequisite: Application to instructor.
An introductory course in the fundamentals of shooting, editing and writing for film and video productions. This is a hands-on production course emphasizing aesthetics, creativity, and technical expertise. The course requires significant amounts of shooting and editing outside class. Students produce short video projects using digital video and Super 8mm film cameras and edit digitally on computer workstations. The principles of three-camera studio production are also covered.

363. Lighting Design and Methodology (3-0-3) Dreyer
Prerequisite: FTT 105/205 or permission.
This course serves as an introduction to the theories and practice of lighting design for the stage. Students will explore the design process as well as study the practical considerations of the execution of a design. Specific topics covered will include electricity, light, theatrical equipment and its development, communication of the design, and the role of the designer within the artistic infrastructure.

364. Costume Design and Methodology (3-0-3) Donnelly
Prerequisite: FTT 105/205 or permission.
This course teaches the principles of costume design for the stage and the techniques of constructing costumes. The course will explore the use of costumes to express character traits by analyzing play scripts. The course will include an introduction of the basic skills needed to construct costumes.

365. Makeup for the Stage (3-0-3) Donnelly
Prerequisite: FTT 105/205 or permission.
Theory and practice of makeup design, including basic, corrective, old-age and special character makeup.

366. History of Costume (3-0-3) Donnelly
This course is an overview of the history of costume and fashion from the prehistoric cultures through the 20th century. The course will look at the ever-changing trends in clothing and provide an understanding of the cultural and historical effects of those changes. The class will investigate how fabric, style, color and the psychology of clothing reflects personal choice, cultural impressions and historical perspectives.

373. History of Documentary Film (3-2-3) Godmilow
Prerequisite: FTT 104/204 or permission.
Corequisite: FTT 373L.
This course will track the history of nonfiction film and television, examining various structures and formats including expository, narrative, experimental, formalist, docudrama and “reality TV.” It will also examine the uses of “actuality” footage in films that make no pretense to objectivity. At the center of the course will be a deconstruction of the notion of “film truth.” Students will develop skills in the critical analysis of documentary and examine the standards by which we evaluate them.
374. The American Film Industry
(3-2-3) Wojcik
Corequisite: FTT 374L.
Students study critical moments in the development of Hollywood and American cinema from the early formation of the star system (c. 1910), through the establishment and demise of the production studios, ending with the age of television and the multiplex. Topics may include the effects of censorship and the rating system, economic aspects of distribution and exhibition, and the changing film audience.

377A. Film and Television Theory
(3-2-3) Collins, Radner
Prerequisite: FTT 310 and FTT 311.
Corequisite: FTT 377L.
This course offers an introduction to the philosophical, aesthetic, cultural and historical issues that inform current scholarship and production in film and television. The focus of the course may vary from semester to semester. Course not available to students who have taken FTT 484.

378. Acting in Film and Theatre
(3-2-3) Arons, Wojcik
Prerequisite: FTT 104/204 or 105/205.
Corequisite: FTT 378L.
This course provides an introduction to acting styles in theater and film, with particular interest in the way in which theater and film influence each other. Rather than "how-to" acting class, this course approaches acting from critical, historical, and theoretical perspectives. Topics may include silent film acting, melodrama, naturalism, the Method, improvisation, the star system, alienation effects, comedic practices, and performance in everyday life. Frequent screenings required.

389. Topics in Media Theory, History and Research
(3-2-3) Staff
Prerequisite: FTT 104/204 or permission.
Corequisite: FTT 389L.
An investigation of selected topics concerning theory, history and research in film, television, the media or cultural studies.

390. Theatre Production Workshop
(V-V-V) Donnelly
Prerequisite: Instructor’s permission.
A workshop course in the process of theatre production, in which students assume a major nonperformance production responsibility including, but not limited to, that of stage manager, assistant stage manager, prop master, costume, technical director and assistant director. Can be repeated for up to four hours of credit.

395. Broadcasting and Cable
(3-0-3) Heisler
This course examines the history and current practices of the broadcast and cable television industry and looks at its effect on American culture and society. Topics of discussion include important issues in the industry, government regulation, news, sports and entertainment programming strategies and practices, ratings and advertising. The course also offers an introduction to basic television production through eight production sessions at WNDU-TV.

401. Film and Cultural Studies
(3-2-3) Collins
Prerequisite: FTT 104/204.
Corequisite: FTT 401L.
This course investigates the ways that film may be studied within a broader cultural context than other courses in history or criticism. The chief interests here are how film relates to the culture that produces it and how film study leads to larger questions concerning how we conceptualize “culture.”

407. Entertainment and Arts Law
(3-0-3) Wilson
Prerequisite: None. Open to majors and non-majors.
Persons in various positions in the arts and entertainment communities encounter a wide range of legal issues. Students will be introduced to the basic concepts of contract, copyright and First Amendment issues. In addition, students will examine the concepts of rights of publicity and privacy, story ideas, receipt of credit, and trademarks. Students are also exposed to the inner workings of the film, television, theatre, music, and publishing industries. It is assumed the students have no prior experience in the study of law. (Summers only.)

411. History of Theatre Before 1700
(3-0-3) Pilkinton
A rigorous survey of the development of theatre as an art form from the recorded beginnings in fifth-century B.C. Athens to the end of the 17th century, including the physical theatre, dramatic literature, production practices, cultural contexts and theoretical foundations.

413. History of Theatre Since 1700
(3-0-3) Pilkinton
A rigorous survey of the development of theatre as an art form during the 18th, 19th, and 20th centuries, including the physical theatre, dramatic literature, production practices, cultural contexts and theoretical foundations.

414. Cinema Ideologies
(3-2-3) Godmilow
Prerequisite: FTT 104-204.
Corequisite: FTT 414L.
Cinema, both in fiction and nonfiction forms, is one of the major contributing forces to the construction of ourselves and our perception of “others,” in terms of class, gender and race. This course proposes to study and dissect these constructions in films like Malcolm X, Schindler’s List, Philadelphia, The Killing Fields and Striptease through a close-reading practice.

415. Dramatic Theory and Criticism
(3-0-3) Pilkinton
Prerequisite: Majors only or permission.
This seminar-style course examines the works of major dramatic theorists and critics from ancient Greece to the 20th century. Theorists and critics covered include Plato, Aristotle, Tertullian, Northbrooke, Collier, Congreve, Voltaire, Diderot, Lessing, Schiller, Hugo, Wagner, Ibsen, Shaw, Brecht, Artaud and Schechner.

419. Advanced Topics in Theatre Studies
(3-0-3) Staff
Prerequisite: Permission of instructor.
Advanced study in the areas of theatre history, dramatic literature, criticism and theory. Topics are taught in a seminar format. May be repeated for credit.

421. Advanced Scene Study
(3-0-3) Staff
Prerequisite: FTT 221 and permission.
This course will be an in-depth look at the acting process through a workshop study of monologues and scenes from the masters of modern theatre. The course begins with the plays of Chekhov and works through the 20th century to contemporary times.

444. Directing: Practice
(3-0-3) Staff
Prerequisites: FTT 344 and permission.
Advanced independent projects in directing. Students considering this course should consult with the instructor for departmental guidelines.

445. Advanced Makeup for the Stage
(3-0-3) Donnelly
Prerequisite: FTT 365.
Advanced theory and practice of makeup design, including script analysis, character interpretation and prosthetic work.
446. Theatre for Youth
(3-0-3) Staff
Designed for both majors and non-majors, this class combines history, literature, theory and practice for a hands-on experience of theatre for young audiences. The class takes a comprehensive look at the trends during the 100 years of theatre, professional and nonprofessional, that has been performed by adults for a mainly child audience. The students are required to attend all Theatre for Youth productions in the area and will bring together their studies in a performance and an accompanying educational study guide.

448. Intermediate Film/Video Production
(3-2-4) Donaruma
Prerequisite: FTT 361.
This film-production course will focus on 16mm black-and-white silent narrative film production. It will explore the technical and aesthetic aspects of the film camera and various equipment and focus on narrative script development for the short film. Students will shoot a composition video exercise, a film-lighting exercise and finally write, produce, shoot and edit one 16mm black-and-white film in teams of two. Students will edit on film and complete a cut workprint. There is a strong emphasis on cinematography, the technical skills involved and the process of working in a crew environment. Also required are a midterm exam, some Friday workshops and evening screenings.

463. Professional Video Production
(3-3-3) Mandell
Prerequisites: FTT 361 or DESN 282S or permission of director.
A course for the advanced production student interested in the techniques and technology of the broadcast video industry, utilizing the following post-production software: Avid Media Composer, Adobe After Effects, Lightwave 3D, and Digidesign Pro Tools. Students produce projects using BetacamSP and DV video equipment while learning the basics of non-linear editing, digital audio sweetening, 2-D compositing and 3-D animation techniques.

465. CAD for the Stage
(3-2-3) Staff
Prerequisite: Permission of instructor.
The study of the use of the computer to design scenery and lighting for the stage. The course will begin at a rudimentary level of understanding of computer-aided design and progress to 2-D and then 3-D design techniques. A basic understanding of the Macintosh computer system is necessary, and significant computer work is required outside class.

470. Film and Melodrama
(3-2-3) Radner
Corequisite: FTT 470L.
Melodrama, one of the most important literary and cinema modes, has its roots in the 19th century. This course incorporates recent critical thought on melodramatic forms into a study of (mostly) French cinema. Examples of films that may be studied include Written on the Wind, Quai des brumes, Les Enfants du Paradis, Vivre sa vie and Madame Bovary.

471. French Cinema and Culture
(3-2-3) Radner
Corequisite: FTT 471L.
France has been a leading producer of films and an innovator in artistic form and content throughout the 20th century. This course, the focus of which varies each year, examines French cinema and its relations to political, social, and cultural developments. Satisfies the FTT “International Area” requirement for Film/TV concentrators. May be repeated.

473B. Sex and Gender in Cinema
(3-2-3) Wojcik
Prerequisite: FTT 104/204.
Corequisite: FTT 473L.
This course analyzes representations of and theories about sex and gender in cinema. Students will read major texts in feminist theory, queer theory, and masculinity studies, in order to become familiar with important concepts and debates within the field. Topics covered will include “the male gaze,” spectatorship, performance and stardom, “reading against the grain,” consumption, gender and genre, race and gender, masquerade, authorship, and masculinity “in crisis.” Students will view classical Hollywood films, silent films, and avant-garde films and videos. Evening screenings required.

474. Film and Media Genres
(3-2-3) Wojcik
Prerequisite: FTT 104/204 or permission of instructor.
Corequisite: FTT 474L.
The course will look at types of stories in film, television or other media. The course may concentrate on a particular genre, such as the Hollywood musical, detective fiction, the Western or the soap opera; or, it may offer a more general exploration of the concept of “genre.”
475. Topics
(3-2-3) Crafton
Prerequisite: FTT 104/204 and majors only.
Corequisite: FTT 475L.
This is an advanced study of the use of film or television technique. Students examine group styles — such as the Hollywood cinema or the European art cinema — or the individual styles of major film or television artists.
Topics vary from semester to semester.

476. Gender and Genre
(3-2-3) Staff
Prerequisite: FTT 104/204.
Corequisite: FTT 476L.
Starting from the fact that certain film genres have been seen as appealing largely to one gender, this course will examine the connections between genre and gender, attempting to get beyond conventional explanations of the gendering of genres (e.g., “guys like violence”; “women like romance”). The course will consider various theories of male and female spectatorship and attempt to assess their applicability to different genres. At the same time, however, this course will question the rigid demarcation of both gender and genres, looking closely at the seemingly increasing prevalence of “gender-bending” and “genre-blending.”

477. Third Cinema
(3-2-3) Staff
Prerequisite: FTT 104/204 or permission.
Corequisite: FTT 477L.
“Third Cinema” is the terms for a wide, multicultural range of films from the Third World. Their stylistic and thematic practices differentiate them from the Hollywood and European traditions that have dominated world cinema. We will not study these films merely as isolated masterpieces, but rather in relation to their larger cultural, historical and theoretical contexts. To this end, the course readings will include essays concerning not only the films themselves but also the theoretical and political issues they engage: colonialism and post-colonialism, cultural, ethnic, racial and sexual difference, and questions of otherness and multiculturalism.

478. Film Culture
(3-2-3) Collins
Prerequisite: FTT 104/204 or permission.
Corequisite: FTT 478L.
This course will investigate how films are circulated and evaluated throughout cultures at different points in the history of the medium. The focus will be on the way films acquire varying levels of cultural significance in terms of how they are accessed by which audiences and how they intersect with other media: publishing industries, popular music, magazines, and literary culture.

479. New American Cinema and Culture
(3-2-3) Collins
Prerequisite: FTT 104/204 or permission.
Corequisite: FTT 479L.
This course concentrates on the most important developments in American cinema and culture since the 1960s. Beginning with the collapse of the classic studio system at the end of the 1950s, this course explores the profound changes that the film industry has undergone over the decades, and investigates the major aesthetic developments that occurred in film and other media during the same period — pop art, metafiction, and postmodernism.

480. Ritual and Drama
(3-0-3) Staff
In this course, performance is studied as a past or imaginary behavior that is restored in the present so as to create a certain effect on spectators. Performance concepts are used to learn how to distinguish ritual from theatre and how to find ritual in theatre. The time structures of dramatic performance are studied. Students present analyses of scripts and performances of drama using these concepts. Regular attendance and required screenings are part of this course. Recommended University elective.

481. Drama and Directors
(3-0-3) Staff
This course investigates the major directing styles of Euro-American directors of drama. Styles may include realism, theatricalism, interculturalism, epic theatre, avant-garde and New Vaudeville. Directors include Stanislavsky, Brecht, Welles, Kazan, Brook and Schechner. Students make presentations based on readings and performances. Regular attendance in class and the viewing of several films outside class are required. Recommended University elective.

482. Dramatic Literature and Criticism Before 1900
(3-0-3) Arons
Prerequisite: FTT 105/205 or instructor’s permission.
An advanced survey of theatrical literature and criticism from the earliest plays to the beginning of the 20th century. Students will read one to two plays per week along with selected secondary critical literature.

483. Dramatic Literature and Criticism Since 1900
(3-0-3) Arons
Prerequisite: FTT 105/205 or instructor’s permission.
An advanced survey of theatrical literature and criticism since the beginning of the 20th century. Students will read one to two plays per week along with selected secondary critical literature.

484. Critical Theory in Film and Television Studies
(3-2-3) Collins
Prerequisites: FTT 104/204, FTT 377.
Corequisite: FTT 484L.
This course offers an introduction to the philosophical, aesthetic, cultural and historical issues that inform current scholarship and production in film and television. The focus of the course may vary from semester to semester.

485. Contemporary Narrative
(3-2-3) Collins
Prerequisite: Permission of instructor.
Corequisite: FTT 485L.
This seminar will focus on the different types of storytelling that have emerged within the past decade in literature and film.

486. Overcoming Political Tragedy
See GE 484.

487. Advanced Film/Video Script Development
(3-0-3) Godmilow
Topic varies. Refer to department.

488. Advanced Film/Video Production
(3-2-6) Godmilow
Prerequisite: FTT 488A; permission required by application.
This is a film/video production workshop for advanced students, focusing on the development and production of 16mm short films and videotapes in the fiction, documentary or formal mode. It stresses writing skills with an emphasis on innovations that expand the existing traditions of and boundaries between fiction and non-fiction practices. Students will work in teams of two and utilize 16mm color film processes and/or Betacam videotape technologies. Some evening screenings required.

489. Advanced Topics in Media Theory, History, and Research
(3-2-3) Staff
Prerequisites: FTT 104/204, FTT 310, 311, and permission of instructor. May be repeated for credit. An advanced investigation of selected topics concerning media or cultural studies.

490. Advanced Theatre Production Workshop
(3-4-3) Arons
Prerequisite: Instructor’s permission.
Corequisite: FTT 490L.
A workshop course in the process of theatre production, in which students learn to do a dramaturgical analysis of a play for production as well as assume a major production responsibility including, but not limited to, that of performer, stage manager, assistant stage manager, prop master, costume, technical director and assistant director. Does not count toward overload. May be repeated.
493. Special Projects in Film
(3-2-3) Godmilow
Prerequisite: FTT 447-448 or FTT 487-488.
This is a film production workshop for advanced students, focusing on the development and production of short films in the fiction, documentary, or formal mode. It stresses writing skills with an emphasis on innovations that expand the existing traditions of and boundaries between fiction and nonfiction practices. Students will work in teams of three and utilize 16mm color film processes and/or Betacam videotape technologies. Some evening screenings required.

494A. Theatre Seminar
(3-V-3) Scott
Prerequisite: Senior majors only, or with permission.
Corequisite: 494L.
Preparation for advanced study of theatre. A course of study for the semester is developed between the student and a faculty advisor or advisors (selected on the basis of goals established at the beginning of the course). Students who will be taking this course should consult with the instructor during the spring preregistration period to preliminarily discuss future goals.

494B. Media Seminar
(V-V-V) Staff
Prerequisite: Permission of instructor. Variable topic seminar. May be repeated for credit with permission.

495. Practicum
(V-V-V) Pilkinton
Prerequisite: Majors only, and permission required. Individual practical projects for the advanced student. May be repeated up to six hours credit. Taken S/U only.

496A. Broadcast Internship (WNDU)
(V-O-V) Heisler
Prerequisite: FTT 361 or 395, and application to instructor.
Students may receive academic credit by completing an internship at WNDU-TV. Interns will enhance their skills and knowledge about the broadcasting/video production industry while gaining practical experience. Interns generally work 10-12 hours a week, complete a midsemester and final evaluation report and produce a project of significance for the department in which they intern. DOES NOT COUNT as a Film/TV upper-level course. Taken S/U only.

496B. Broadcast Internship
(V-O-V) Mandell
Prerequisite: FTT 361 or FTT 395 or FTT 399, and application to instructor.
Placement of advanced students with local commercial or public broadcasting facility. DOES NOT COUNT as a Film/TV 400-level course. Taken S/U only.

496C. Theatre Internship
(V-O-V) Staff
Prerequisite: Permission of instructor by application.
Placement of advanced students with local professional or community theatre organizations. DOES NOT COUNT as a Film/TV upper-level course. Taken S/U only.

496E. Film Production Internship
(V-O-V) Mandell
Prerequisite: FTT 447-448, and permission by application to instructor.
Placement of advanced students as crew members with local, professional and educational film productions. DOES NOT COUNT as a Film/TV upper-level course. Taken S/U only.

496F. Media Internship
Cannot be counted toward FTT major. (Intended for non-FTT majors. 1 credit.)

498. Special Studies
(V-V-V) Staff
Prerequisite: Permission of the sponsoring professor and chair required, by application. Research for the advanced student.

Program of Studies. The study of German and Russian languages and literatures provides educational opportunities relevant to an increasingly interdependent world. The acquisition of foreign language skills in general is an important component of liberal education because it enhances students’ powers of communication and it serves to introduce them to enduring cultural achievements of other peoples. In this sense, the study of German and Russian widens students’ intellectual horizons, stimulates the understanding of two significant cultural traditions and allows the examination of these traditions in a more sophisticated and cosmopolitan manner.

Beginning, elementary and intermediate courses develop students’ abilities to understand, speak, read and write German or Russian with facility and confidence. Weekly exercises in the language resource center provide further practice in oral communication. Courses in advanced German or Russian language, literature, culture and civilization expose the student to a wealth of literary, cultural and humanistic traditions as well as facilitate a better understanding of the rich national cultures of the German-speaking countries and of Russia.
THE GERMAN PROGRAM

Requirements for German Majors
The requirements for a major in German include competency in the target language and the successful completion of 10 courses (30 credit hours) above the three-semester language requirement, of which at least four have to be taken on the advanced level (300 or 400) within departmental offerings.

Supplementary majors are expected to demonstrate competency in German and complete a minimum of eight courses (24 credit hours) above the three-semester language requirement, of which at least three must be taken at the advanced level (300 or 400) within departmental offerings.

For majors or supplementary majors in German, a year of study abroad in Innsbruck, Austria, is considered customary. They are, therefore, strongly encouraged to participate in this program during their sophomore or junior year. For further information, see the section on International Study Programs.

Students are encouraged to consider taking a supplementary major in German. It is manageable to fulfill requirements next to any major. Past experience has shown that a major in German can be very helpful for any future career plans.

The Minor in German
15 credits, or 5 courses, of which at least four must be in German language and/or literature at the 200 level or above and conducted in German; of these four, at least one must be at the 300 or 400 level. The fifth course may be a course on German literature taught in English, or a course on a German subject in another discipline (Philosophy, Political Science, History, Theology, etc.).

Senior Thesis
German majors who wish to graduate with honors may write a Senior Thesis. For those German majors who elect to write a thesis, several requirements must be met: (1) The student must have a GPA of 3.5 or higher in the major; (2) the thesis must be at least 40 pages long; and (3) the thesis must be written in German.

The student writing a thesis enrolls in German 499 and receives one course credit (three credit hours) for the course. Although the thesis is graded by the advisor (to receive honors, the thesis must receive a grade of B+ or higher), the entire department reads the thesis, acting as an advisory body to the advisor. The thesis is due the week after spring break, and the student is strongly advised to begin thinking about it and start conferring with the advisor before the October break of the fall term.

THE RUSSIAN PROGRAM

Requirements for Russian Majors
Majors in Russian must complete 10 courses (30 credit hours) beyond the three-semester language requirement, of which four must be taken at the 300 or 400 level from departmental offerings. At least two of these courses must be literature in the original Russian (400-level). In addition, one course may be on a Russian subject in another discipline, e.g., art, political science, or history.

Supplementary majors in Russian must complete eight courses (24 credit hours) beyond the three-semester language requirement, of which three must be taken at the 300 or 400 level from departmental offerings. As with the major, two of these courses must be in Russian literature in the original. In addition, one course may be on a Russian subject in another discipline, e.g., art, political science, or history.

Minor in Russian
15 credits, or five courses, of which at least four must be in Russian language and/or literature at the 200 level or above and conducted in Russian; of these four, at least one must be at the 400 level. The fifth course may be a course on Russian literature taught in English, or a course on a Russian subject in another discipline (e.g., art, philosophy, political science, history, theology, etc.).

Minor in Russian and East European Studies
For a minor in Russian and East European studies, students must have (1) at least four college semesters or the equivalent of Russian or a language spoken in Central or Eastern Europe (German will be accepted in certain cases); (2) four area studies courses beyond the major, chosen from at least three departments (students with double majors can normally count two courses in the second major toward fulfilling this requirement); and (3) a thesis normally written in the senior year and directed by a faculty member in the Russian and East European Studies program. Students can typically attain six credits for this project, i.e., three credits for directed readings in the first semester and three credits for writing the thesis in the second.

Students studying Russian are urged to spend a summer or a semester in Russia through an approved international study program. Courses in language and literature taken in Russia in approved programs may substitute for certain Russian courses here at Notre Dame.

Students are encouraged to consider taking a supplementary major in Russian. It is manageable to fulfill requirements next to any major. Past experience has shown that a supplementary major in Russian can be very helpful for any career plans.

Writing-Intensive Courses
All 300- and 400-level literature courses in German or Russian are writing intensive. Majors in German or Russian who take upper-level literature courses fulfill the writing-intensive requirement of the College of Arts and Letters.

Placement and Language Requirement
At the beginning of each semester, placement tests in German and Russian will be administered that will allow students either to test out of one or two semesters of the language requirement or enroll in a course commensurate with their language proficiency. The placement test is mandatory for students who had German or Russian in high school.

Students testing out of three semesters must complete an additional course at the 200 level or higher before receiving credit and testing out of the language requirement.

Course Descriptions
The following course descriptions give the number, title, and a brief characterization of each course. Lecture or class hours per week, laboratory or tutorial hours per week and credits each semester are in parentheses. Not all of these courses are offered every year.

101F-102F. Beginning German I and II
(4-0-3) (4-0-3) Staff
No prerequisite.
An introductory course of the spoken and written language. Aims at the acquisition of basic structures, vocabulary and sound systems. For students with no previous study of the language.

101F-102F. Intensive Beginning German I and II
(6-0-5) (6-0-5) Weber
No prerequisite.
In this course students will develop skills in understanding, speaking, reading and writing German. They will also attain a grasp of the basic structures of the language. During class, emphasis will be placed on using the language to communicate and interact in a variety of situations and contexts. In addition, there will be a comprehensive introduction to the culture of German-speaking countries, with a particular emphasis on Austria, as this course is designed to prepare students with no previous study of German to participate in the International Studies Program in Innsbruck.

180. Literature University Seminar
(3-0-3) Staff
This course introduces students to German literature and culture while also serving as an introduction to the seminar method of instruction. The course is writing intensive with emphasis given to improving students’ writing skills through the careful analysis of specific texts.
201. Intermediate German I
(3-0-3) Staff
Prerequisite: Two semesters or equivalent.
In this course, students will build on and develop their communicative abilities acquired in Beginning German I and II. The four skills approach (speaking, listening, reading, writing) is centered on authentic texts, recordings, videos, and other images. The course includes grammar review, concentrated vocabulary expansion, and intensive practice.

201F-202F. Intensive Intermediate German I and II
(4-1-5) (4-1-5) Weber
Prerequisite: Two semesters or equivalent.
Comprehensive training in all language skills leading to a balanced mastery of German. For students with two to three years of German in high school, this course serves as preparation for the Innsbruck International Study Program.

202. Intermediate German II
(3-0-3) Staff
Prerequisite: Three semesters or equivalent.
In this bridge course, students will strengthen and refine the four linguistic skills (speaking, listening, reading, writing). Students will work toward greater fluency, accuracy, and complexity of expression. They will debate, analyze, and express opinions. Materials and class discussions will center on a cultural topic that will carry through the entire semester.

210. Readings in German Cultural History
(3-0-3) Staff
Prerequisite: Three semesters or the equivalent.
An introduction to the development and flowering of the various epochs of German culture against the broader background of European history as a whole.

241. Intermediate Conversation and Composition
(3-0-3) Hagens, Wimmer
Prerequisite: Three semesters or the equivalent.
This course is designed to strengthen the student’s ability to master the German language in the principal skills of speaking, comprehension and writing. The various text selections used should help the student to become familiar with some of the issues and problems of contemporary life of German-speaking countries and to develop an ability to communicate thoughts on topics of general interest, both orally and in writing.

253. Philosophy of Power
(3-0-3) Hode
No prerequisite.
Power is a pervasive feature of human relations but nevertheless difficult to grasp. It is unavoidable and at the same time in dire need of moral restraints. This lecture course is dedicated to a logical analysis of the concept of power, to a phenomenology of its forms and to a systematization of the maxims of power-oriented individuals as well as to an ethical evaluation of those forms and those maxims. We will use many examples from history and literature.

302. The ABCs of Reading and Writing about Literature (In German)
(3-0-3) Profit
Prerequisite: 202 or equivalent.
At most two works will be read: Dürenmatt’s Der Richter und sein Henker and Der Besuch der alten Dame. We will read these carefully with great attention to detail. Writing assignments will evolve from the readings; they may include a character portrayal, the description of an outdoor event, a short conversation, description of a crime scene, etc. They will increase in length from a single paragraph to two or three pages.

303. German for Conversation
(3-0-3) Lontzas
This is an advanced German language course, designed for students who have successfully completed a minimum of four semesters of German. This course expands on the grammatical structures of the German language spoken in German-speaking countries today, with emphasis on communication and acquisition of advanced language skills: reading and listening comprehension, and oral and written expression. A study of everyday German culture supports the language study. The conversational component of the course requires student/teacher and student/student interaction (in large and small group settings) to exchange information, clarify meanings, express opinions, argue points of view, and engage in any other communicative functions for which native speakers use language. The course includes ongoing evaluation of students, using a variety of evaluative instruments and communicative contexts.

306. The Face(s) of German Identity
(3-0-3) DellaRossa
Prerequisite: GE 202 or equivalent.
The dismantling of the border between the two German states not only changed the German landscape but also disrupted the silence regarding concepts of national identity in Germany: This course examines the cultural constructions of nation and identity in Germany, beginning with the French Revolution and continuing to today. The subjects we examine include essays, poetry, short stories, films, architecture, and painting, facilitating classroom discussions on the intersecting discourses of geography, religion, gender, ethnicity, and nationality and their influence on German identity.

310. Literary Forms and Composition
(3-0-3) Staff
Prerequisite: Four semesters.
This course fosters careful reading and a sensitivity to different kinds of literary texts. Discussions and weekly essays will refine the student’s language skills and written expression in German.

313. Business German (In German)
(3-0-3) Wimmer
Prerequisite: Four semesters.
German business language and practices. Designed to introduce the internationally oriented business and German major to the language, customs and practices of the German business world.

315. Medieval German Literature
(3-0-3) Wimmer
GE 315 constitutes a survey of German literature from its beginnings during Germanic times until the 16th century. Ideas, issues and topics are discussed in such a way that their continuity can be seen throughout the centuries. Lectures and discussions are in German, but individual students’ language abilities are taken into consideration. Readings include modern German selections from major medieval authors and works such as Hildebrandlied, Rolandlied, Nibelungenlied, Iwein, Parzival, Tristan, courtly lyric poetry, the German mystics, secular and religious medieval drama, Der Ackermann aus Böhmen, and the beast epic Reineke Fuchs. Class discussions and brief presentations in German by students on the selections are intended as an opportunity for stimulating exchange and formal use of German.
330. The Romantic Tradition
(3-0-3) Norton

No prerequisite.

Crosslisted with ENGL 346.

Between 1790 and 1830, the movement known as Romanticism profoundly changed the artistic, musical, historical, religious, and political sensibilities of the Continent and in Britain. Romanticism marked a turn from the rational formalism of the Classical period and reawakened an interest in myth, religious faith, the imagination, and emotional experience. In this course we will focus principally on the German contribution to Romanticism and trace its origins, development, and eventual decline in works of literature, philosophy, theology, music, painting, and architecture. Works to be studied will include those by the writers Ludwig Tieck, Friedrich von Hardenberg (Novialis), and Friedrich Schlegel; the philosophers Fichte and Schelling; the theologian Friedrich Schleiermacher; the painters Caspar David Friedrich and some members of the Nazarene school; the composers Franz Schubert, Felix Mendelssohn, and Robert Schumann; and the architect Carl Friedrich Schinkel.

350. The Nazi Past in Postwar German Film (in English)
(3-3-3) Hagens

Prerequisite: None for those taking the class in translation; to receive German credit, advanced standing in German (minimum of four semesters or the equivalent) is required.

How have German films since 1945 been trying to deal with the Nazi past? How do Germans picture their memories of the Third Reich, how do they define themselves within and against their country’s history, and how do they live with their remembrances now? Primarily, this course aims at issues in the realm of ethics (perpetrators, victims, and passive accomplices); stereotypes; courage and cowardice; personal and national guilt; revisionism, coming-to-terms, and productive memory; responsibility and the (im)possibility of reconciliation.

Some central questions about German history during the Third Reich and the postwar era will be dealt with. The course will also develop basic categories of film analysis and ask questions about the special capacity of film to help a nation work through its past. Films subtitled, dubbed, or in English language. Readings, lectures and discussions in English.

365. German Novelle
(3-0-3) Staff

Prerequisite: Four semesters or the equivalent.

This course will explore the German “Novelle,” one of the most popular genres of 19th-century German literature. Each work will be read and discussed with careful attention to its formal characteristics as well as its historical and cultural contexts. By proceeding chronologically through the literary periods of Romanticism, Biedermeier, Poetic Realism, and Naturalism, students will gain a sense of literary developments in the 19th century and how these reflect shifts within the broader culture. Among the writers to be read: Goethe, Tieck, Kleist, Hoffmann, Eichendorff, Stifter, Storm, Keller and Hauptmann. As a 300-level course, writing will be emphasized. Students will be required to rewrite each of their essays.

366. 19th-Century German Literature (in German)
(3-0-3) Norton

Prerequisite: Four semesters or equivalent.

The 70 years that separate the death of Goethe in 1832 and the turn of the 20th century are rich in examples of literary and cultural achievement. This diversity and complexity has given rise to a variety of epochal designations — Biedermeier, “Vormärz,” Realism, Naturalism, Symbolism, to name the most prominent — which have served to categorize each successive generation’s literary, political, and social agenda. In this course, we will consider the main outlines of 19th-century German literature (including in Austria and Switzerland) by studying representative works of all major genres — prose, poetry, drama — and by some of the greatest writers of their day: Mielke, Heine, Grillparzer, Hebbel, Keller, Meyer, Raabe, Fontane, George.

370. Ostalgie?: The Cultural Legacies of the GDR
(3-0-3) DellaRossa

Through literature, film, and news sources, this course examines the cultural production of the German Democratic Republic. We look at how East German cultural policies influenced literary content and style, what forms that resistance to these policies took, and how East German artists grappling with Nazi Germany and the Holocaust have now transformed into the new unified Germany.

390. Germany and the New Millennium
(3-0-3) Lontias

Prerequisite: Four semesters or the equivalent.

This course addresses the most important political, socioeconomic, cultural, and environmental issues currently confronting Germany, Austria, and Switzerland. The course is designed to develop confidence in communicative skills and greater facility in dealing with ideas in German and aims to expand the learners’ cultural knowledge acquired in previous German courses, with emphasis on communication and acquisition of the advanced language skills: genre-based reading and listening comprehension, and oral and written expression on contemporary topics. The conversational component of this course will require student/teacher and student/student interaction (in large and small group settings) to exchange cultural information, clarify meanings, express opinions, argue points of view, and engage in communicative functions that language is used for. This course will include an ongoing evaluation of students, using a variety of evaluative instruments and communicative contexts.

398. Special Studies I and II
(3-0-3) Staff

Prerequisite: Junior standing, dean’s list.

420. Love and Violence in Medieval German Literature (in German)
(3-0-3) Christensen

Prerequisite: Four semesters or the equivalent.

This course will investigate the interplay of love and violence in a fascinating variety of secular and religious texts by both women and men from the German Middle Ages. Knowledge of Middle High German is not required, but, where available, students will read modern German with facing medieval text.

440. Goethe and His Time
(3-0-3) Norton

Prerequisite: Four semesters.

An intensive study of Goethe’s major works of poetry, prose and drama within the cultural framework of his times.

448. German Cinema in the Weimar Republic (1918-1933) (in English)
(3-0-3) Hagens

Prerequisites: None for those taking the class in translation. For those desiring German credit, advanced standing in German (five semesters or permission of instructor) is necessary.

The years between 1918 and 1933 are the Golden Age of German film. In its development from Expressionism to Social Realism, the German cinema produced works of great variety, many of them in the international avant-garde. This course gives an overview of the silent movies and sound films made during the Weimar Republic and situate them in their artistic, social, and political context. The oeuvre of Fritz Lang, the greatest German director, receives special attention. Should we interpret Lang’s disquieting visual style as a highly individual phenomenon independent of its environment, or can we read his obsessive themes (world conspiracies and terrorized masses, compulsive violence and revenge, entrapment and guilt) as a mirror image of the historical period? Might his films, as some critics have suggested, even illustrate how a national psyche gets enmeshed in fascist ideology?

Films subtitled, dubbed, or in English; readings, lectures, and discussions in English.

455. German Drama 1750 to the Present (in German)
(3-0-3) Hagens

Prerequisite: Five semesters or equivalent, or permission of the instructor.

We will read and discuss some of the greatest plays in the German dramatic tradition, by authors such as Lessing, Goethe, Schiller, Kleist, Grillparzer, Nestroy, Freitag, Hauptmann, Hofmannsthal, Brecht, and Werfel. This semester we will focus on the so-called “drama of reconciliation,” a newly rediscovered genre, where the conflict is serious but ends harmoniously. By interpreting classic German-language plays in the original, you will (1) learn how to approach drama analysis, and you will
(2) develop a sense for the history of drama throughout the past 250 years. In addition, we will study a few short, and often English-language, texts in the theory of drama (Aristotle, Schelling, Carriere, and Cavell, as well as our department's own Hösel and Roche), which will (3) allow you to differentiate between the basic genres of drama (tragedy, comedy, and drama of reconciliation), and you will (4) understand better the nature of conflict and reconciliation. Students interested in other national literatures will have the opportunity to draw comparisons with plays by authors such as Aeschylus, Sophocles, Shakespeare, Calderón, Corneille, Racine, and Ibsen; and those interested in film may branch out into analyzing works by directors such as Hitchcock, Renoir, Ford, Capra, Curtiz, Hawks, Chaplin, and Kurosawa.

470. Modern Lyric Poetry (3-0-3) Profit
Prerequisite: Four semesters.
A close reading and analysis of 20th-century poetry from expressionism to the present.

471. 20th-Century Prose and Poetry (3-0-3) Profit
Prerequisite: Four semesters.
To make the student aware of the rich diversity of both form and content extant in 20th-century literature, a wide variety of materials will be studied. They will not only encompass various genres (the poem, the short story, the novel and the drama) but will also represent various time periods, from the early 1900s to the '70s. Among others, readings will include Rilke; Die Weise von Liebe und Tod des Cornets Christoph Rilke; Kafka, Der Landarzt; Dürrenmmatt, Der Richter und sein Henker; Borchert, Draussen vor der Tür.

472. The Modern German Short Story (3-0-3) Staff
Prerequisite: Four semesters.
Modern German Prose: the German short story and other forms of prose from the “Stunde Null” in 1945 to the 1990s. Authors range from East and West German writers of the immediate postwar era to the most recent commentators on issues of politics, society, gender and aesthetics.

473. Drama and Directors (3-0-3) Arons
No prerequisite.
"Brecht and Beyond." The German playwright and director Bertolt Brecht is considered to be one of the most influential theatre artists of the 20th century. This course will look at his impact on the development of theatre here and abroad. In the first half of the semester, we will read several of Brecht’s plays and discuss his directorial practices and theoretical work. In the second half, we will look at plays and productions in the United States and Europe that have been influenced by Brecht’s work.

475. The World as Theater (In German) (3-0-3) Hagens
Prerequisite: Four semesters of German or the equivalent.
"All the world’s a stage" — this insight has been dramatized by many playwrights. While the core of this idea seems to have remained the same (namely, the world is like a theatre, human existence like a play, and we are like actors), the form of the idea has gone through many telling variations. By observing these changes, we will learn not only about the history of drama and theatre over the past 350 years but also about the relation between a stage play and the rest of reality; and most importantly, we will find out what the foremost dramatists advocated and their role in life should be. We will read, discuss and write about some of the greatest dramas in the German-language tradition, by authors such as Weise, Tieck, Buechner, Schnitzler, Hofmannsthal, Brecht, Weiss, Handke, Dürrenmmatt and Tabori.

477. Holocaust in German Film and Theatre (In German) (3-0-3) Hagens
Prerequisite: Five semesters of German or permission of instructor.
We will study German, Austrian, and Swiss stage plays and films that have the Holocaust for their central issue. Our close analyses will be framed by broader questions: How can the (re)presentation of evil on stage or screen become meaningful—or is such an endeavor beyond the limits of (re)presentation? What are the respective weaknesses and strengths of theatre and cinema when confronted with this challenging topic? How do German and Austrian plays and films about the Holocaust differ from the ones produced in other countries?

479. Aesthetics, Aestheticism, Aestheticization (In English) (3-0-3) Norton
No prerequisite.
One of the persistent clichés of modern German culture was that Germany was the land of “poets and thinkers,” with politics largely falling outside the equation. Obviously, this disregard for politics is itself a deeply political gesture, with potentially — and in Germany’s case, verifiably — disastrous consequences. In this class, we explore the relationship between art, theories of art, and politics, with an emphasis on the peculiarly German desire to envision a political utopia based on aesthetic principles. Spanning nearly two centuries, the texts we study trace a development that began in the Enlightenment and reached a conclusion during the middle of this century. Readings may include works by Herder, Schiller, Hegel, Heine, Marx, Nietzsche, Thomas Mann, Walter Benjamin, Heidegger, Georg Lukacs, and Adorno.

480. The German Novel Since 1945 (3-0-3) Profit
Prerequisite: Four semesters.
An extensive study of the post-World War II novel of the German-speaking countries, its characteristic themes and forms. Readings will include Böll, Wolf and Dürenmmatt.

481. Die DDR: Die Ideen und die Menschen (3-0-3) Christensen
Prerequisite: Four semesters.
We will begin this course by discussing the end of World War II and the consequent division of Germany. We will study the German Democratic Republic from the inside, that is, through literature that was officially sanctioned by the GDR government. This will include writings to represent each decade from the 1940s through the 1980s, culminating with the fall of the Berlin Wall, by authors such as Friedrich Wolf, Willi Bredel, Stephan Hermlin, Christa Wolf, Ulrich Pletzendorf and Christoph Hein. To provide important perspective, we will also read works by artists who were compelled to leave the GDR to continue their craft, such as Wolf Biermann and Freya Klöwer. We will also consider news articles, letters, interviews, school texts and political cartoons, which will offer a diverse, provocative, authentic and sometimes quite personal approach to the study of the GDR. We will also study the short but significant span of time between the fall of the Wall and the unification of the two German states and will conclude by reading several short stories by Doris Doerr treating the lasting complexities of unification.

482. Literature of Unified Germany 1989-2000 (In German) (3-0-3) Christensen
Prerequisite: Four semesters or the equivalent.
How has German identity changed since 1989? In what ways has the status quo of divided Germany been maintained, even fortified, by unification? Is the literature written in Germany since 1989 merely reflecting or is it influencing societal, cultural or political change? Or is it indeed independent of such changes? To begin to answer these questions, we read a variety of texts written in Germany since late 1989. To facilitate deep exploration and discussion, we read a relatively small number of texts that will nonetheless represent a wide range of genres (novel, short story, drama, poetry, reportage). Authors include Christa Wolf, Günter Grass, Dürr, Olaf Bach, Christoph Hein. To illuminate the literary works we will read, we also read and debate what some German authors have written and are writing about their own social and historical role — and the role of their writings — in Germany today.
483. Seminar on German Women Writers (in German)
(3-0-3) Christensen
Participants in this seminar will explore the rich literary history of female writers from German-speaking Europe. We read works of many genres (drama, short story, novella, novel, letter) by women from the early Middle Ages to the present. In the process, we uncover Europe's first playwright, one of the 21st century's brightest young literary stars, and an array of intriguing women who lived in the interim. We scrutinize and apply various theoretical and critical approaches to women's literature, both in writing and in lively debates.

484. Overcoming Political Tragedy
(3-0-3) Christensen
Prerequisite: II taken for German, five semesters of German. Otherwise, none. Fulfills literature requirement in the College of Arts and Letters.
An interdisciplinary course in drama and peace studies. Drama is a potentially fascinating topic for peace studies because, at the heart of traditional drama and theatre, there is conflict—and the question of whether it can be resolved. Moreover, just as politics is often dramatic, drama is often political; there is, for example, an extensive tradition of plays that make a theme of political revolution, usually in the form of tragedy or comedy. Students in this course read classic political dramas that are neither tragedies nor comedies but rather bring potentially tragic public conflict to positive yet non-trivial resolution.

Having discussed definitions of tragedy and comedy, and what might be the advantages of aesthetic renditions of conflict, the class then reads some of these dramas of political reconciliation: Aeschylus, Oresteias/Eumenides; Shakespeare, Measure for Measure; Calderón, The Mayor of Zalamea; Corneille, Cinna; Lessing, Nathan the Wise; Schiller, William Tell; Kleist, The Prince of Homburg; Brecht, The Caucasian Chalk Circle; Lan, Desire; and Fugard, Valley Song. We also may include selected films, such as Meet John Doe, On the Waterfront, or Twelve Angry Men.) We will examine these plays (and films) through both the categories of drama analysis and theories of conflict resolution, mediation, and transformation, with the expectation of achieving greater depth in our interpretations of the dramatic texts and in our understanding of the theories of conflict resolution.

Students of peace studies and political science who are familiar with these pieces of world literature will have acquired a new kind of resource for their ability to think through and work in conflict resolution. Being able to draw on such artistically crafted illustrations of political mediation opens up historically diverse, cross-cultural, and emotionally nuanced perspectives onto the topic of their studies. Conversely, students of drama and theatre will acquire more sophisticated technical instruments for the analysis of aesthetic conflict.

It is hoped that guest speakers from other departments will participate in the class. All discussions, texts, and papers are in English, and special arrangements can be made for students of German.

485. Religious Themes in Modern German Literature and Thought
(3-0-3) Roche
Prerequisite: Four semesters.
This course addresses a variety of religious issues, ranging from 18th-century secularization and discussions of the theology to the 19th century's various critiques of religion and 20th-century discussions of the responsibility of the Church and of religion and intellectuals. The course addresses both the literary embodiment of religious themes and essayistic analyses of religious issues. Authors to be read and discussed include Lessing, Novalis, Holderlin, Büchner, Grillparzer, Feuerbach, Marx, Nietzsche, Freud and Hochhuth.

486. Der Artusroman—Arthurian Epic
(3-0-3) Christensen
Come and explore the enduring legend of King Arthur and his court as interpreted by German authors of the high Middle Ages (late 12th and 13th centuries). We spend the majority of the semester on the three best-known and most complete Arthurian epics in the German tradition: Erec and Iwein by Hartmann von Aue, and Willehalm von Eschenbach’s Parzival, as well as other later German adaptations they influenced. These tales are among the most imaginative and fascinating in the German canon, full of the adventures and exploits of knights and ladies. Our exploration of these texts focuses on their relationship to their French and English predecessors, on the many twists and turns in story line and character development that each individual author creates, and on the information they suggest about “real” life in the medieval world. We also take a look at some of the most interesting modern literary and film adaptations of the Arthurian legend.

487. Literature in the Age of Technology
(3-0-3) Roche
Prerequisite: Four semesters.
By way of philosophical analyses and literary examples, we shall analyze the role of literature and the humanities in an age increasingly defined by technology. Works will be chosen from authors such as Schiller, Hoffmann, Storm, Kaiser, Benjamin, Heidegger, Benn and Dürrenmatt.

488. Philosophical Dialogues
(3-0-3) Hoose
No prerequisite.
Philosophy is communicated in different literary genres, as essays, treaties, didactic poems, the choice of which influences in a subtle manner the contents exposed. One of the most interesting literary genres used by philosophers is certainly the dialogue, since it allows to hide the author’s mind behind a variety of different positions that get the chance to articulate themselves and since it shows the connection between philosophical ideas and discursive behavior. We shall read different texts ranging from Plato to Feyerabend to see how different philosophers have exploited the possibilities of this genre.

489. Literature and Religion (in German)
(3-0-3) Braungart
Prerequisite: Four semesters.
Literature, according to Martin Walser, descends from religion just as irrefutably as human beings do from the apes. Indeed, there is no denying that even during aesthetic modernism, literature, art, and religion are closely intertwined. When an achieved autonomous status in the second half of the 18th century, it did shed its subservient function relative to religion, yet in terms of its topics, themes, and, most particularly, its claim to interpret and give meaning to human existence, literature remained tied to religion and also became its great rival.

This class examines several stations of this development. Beginning with church hymns during the Renaissance and Barock, we see how the Bible was seen as a literary text in the 18th century. At the end of the century, art is conceived as an autonomous and even holy artifact. Poetry, for some, even becomes the medium of human self-definition and the place in which new myths are created. In the Romantic period, art and religion again become fused into a single unity. A century later, art and religion again come into close contact in lyric poetry of the fin-de-siècle. The class concludes with a consideration of the psalm form in 20th-century poetry. Readings include works by Luther, Paul Gerhard, Klopstock, Holderlin, Wackenroder, Stefan George, Rilke, Trall, Brecht, Celan, and Bachmann.

492. Schopenhauer
(3-0-3) Hoose
Prerequisite: Senior standing, dean’s list.
Schopenhauer’s philosophy signifies a great break in the history of Western philosophy: No longer Reason, but the Will becomes the grounding principle; Schopenhauer claims furthermore to integrate, in a productive way Buddhism into his pessimistic world view. His influence on the philosophy, but also on the arts of the 19th and 20th centuries, has been enormous, not least of all because of his original aesthetics. We will read his main work, The World as Will and Representation.

493. Nietzsche
(3-0-3) Hoose
Prerequisite: Senior standing, dean’s list.
Nietzsche’s philosophy represents one of the greatest interpretive moments in the history of philosophy: No one has destroyed as many assumptions as radically as Nietzsche. At the same time, his work represents a challenge to the literary mind inasmuch as Nietzsche discovered new forms of expression for philosophical thought. All who are interested in German intellectual history as well as in the philosophy of the 20th century should study his work, even if they conclude that Nietzsche’s arguments for this break in the tradition are not convincing.
494. Thomas Mann
(3-0-3) Hinde
Thomas Mann is certainly the most influential German novelist of the 20th century. Rooted in the Bildungsbürgertum of the 19th century, influenced by Richard Wagner and the philosophies of Arthur Schopenhauer and Friedrich Nietzsche, he is at the same time a profoundly modern writer with remarkable innovations in narrative techniques. We shall read three of his novels which deal with general cultural (and sometimes also very specific German) issues—the humanizing power of myth (Joseph and His Brothers), the greatness of an outstanding individual and its unhealthy impact on his environment (Lotte in Weimar), the development of modern art at the price of the dissolution of its bonds with morality and its political consequences (Doktor Faustus).

498. Special Studies I and II
(3-0-3) Wimmer
Prerequisite: Senior standing, dean’s list.

RUSSIAN

101-102. Beginning Russian I and II
(3-0-3) (3-0-3) Dinero, Marullo, Cruise
No prerequisite.
An intensive introduction to the essentials of Russian grammar, with specific emphasis on the noun and verbal systems. Aims at the acquisition of basic structures, vocabulary and sound systems.

201-202. Intermediate Russian I and II
(3-0-3) Gasperetti
Prerequisite: 102 or the equivalent.
This course is an intensive review of grammar designed to facilitate a native-like mastery of the form and function of the Russian noun, verbal, and adjectival systems. Exceptional forms are stressed, and reading selections on contemporary Russian life and excerpts from literary texts are employed to improve comprehension and build conversational skills.

241-242. Advanced Russian I and II
(3-0-3) (3-0-3) Staff
Prerequisite: 202 or the equivalent.
Drill in everyday patterns of conversation; emphasis on idiomatic Russian; vocabulary expansion; grammar review; reading and discussion of Russian literature and culture; written compositions, newspapers and magazines used as supplementary materials.

373-374. 19th-Century Russian Literature Survey I and II (in English)
(3-0-3) (3-0-3) Marullo
No prerequisite.
19th-Century Russian Literature I (1800-1860) in English is the first part of a two-semester survey of long and short fiction and focuses on the rise of Realism in Russia, in particular the early fiction of Turgenev, Tolstoy and Dostoevsky. Readings include Alexander Pushkin’s The Tales of Belkin (1830), The Queen of Spades (1830), The Bronze Horseman (1833) and Eugene Onegin (1833); Mikhail Lermontov’s A Hero of Our Time (1840); Nikolai Gogol’s “Nevsky Prospects” (1835), The Portrait (1835), The Overcoat (1842) and Dead Souls (1842); Ivan Turgenev’s Notes of a Hunterman (1852) and Rudin (1856); Fyodor Dostoevsky’s Poor Folk (1845), The Double (1846) and Nenochka Nezvanova (1849); and Leo Tolstoy’s Childhood (1852) and The Satirist’s Sketches (1855-1856).

Topics to be included are the content and method of Realism (“gentry,” “urban,” “classical,” “romantic,” and “psychological”); the evolution of the “family” chronicle; the nature and development of the Russian hero and heroine, particularly, the so-called “superfious” and “little” man; the interplay of “patriarchal,” “matriarchal,” and messianic voices; the dynamics of Russian soul and soil; the interaction of lord and peasant; and finally, the conflict between city and country, “old” and “new,” Russia and the West.

Daily readings and discussions. Several small papers, projects, and exams.

375-376. 20th-Century Russian Literature I and II (in English)
(3-0-3) (3-0-3) Marullo
No prerequisite.
RU 375 investigates the literary expression that attended the explosion in the arts in Russia—for example, Stravinsky in music, Diaghilev in ballet, Chagall in painting— in the first 30 years of the 20th century. Literary movements covered include decadence, proletarian literature, and modernism. RU 376 focuses on literature as protest against Soviet totalitarianism and as an assertion of the freedom and dignity of the individual in the face of challenges from the state and from “modern life.”
379. Brothers Karamazov (in English)
(3-0-3) Gasperetti
No prerequisite.
This course is a multifaceted investigation into the philosophical, political, psychological, religious, and literary determinants of Dostoevsky’s longest and most complex novel. Emphasis is placed on daily, in-depth discussions based on a close reading of The Brothers Karamazov: Collateral assignments illuminate a variety of themes in the novel, from the author’s visionary political predictions and rejection of West European materialism to his critique of rationalism and mockery of literary convention.

381. Russian Women Memoirists
(3-0-3) Dingea
Throughout the history of Russian literature, the genres of autobiography, memoir, and diary have provided a venue for women to find their voices in a private arena safely distanced from the privileged genres of novels and lyric poetry. This course examines the history and development of the female memoir in Russian literature, from the 18th-century memoirs of a courtier of Catherine the Great to documents of the Stalinist terror and prison camp life of the 20th century. We also will address theoretical questions about women’s autobiographical writing and consider the relationship of the works we read to the dominant “male” literary tradition.

393. Dostoevsky (in English)
(3-0-3) Marullo
No prerequisite.
Selections from Dostoevsky’s short stories, novellas and novels.

394. Tolstoy (in English)
(3-0-3) Cruise
No prerequisite.
Selections from Tolstoy’s folk tales, short stories, novellas and novels.

451. St. Petersburg as Russian Cultural Icon
(3-0-3) Gasperetti
St. Petersburg’s rich cultural heritage is used to investigate Russia’s struggle for national identity. Areas covered include literature (Pushkin, Gogol, Dostoevsky, Blok, Akhmatova, Zamiati), painting (Repin, Surikov, Malvich), music (Stravinsky, Shostakovich), dance (Diaghilev, Fokine), and film (Eisenstein).

461. 19th-Century Russian Literature Survey (in Russian)
(3-0-3) Gasperetti
Prerequisite: 202 or the equivalent.
Introduces the major movements and authors of the 19th century. Special attention is given to the genesis of the modern tradition of Russian literature in the first half of the century and to the role literary culture played in the political and social ferment of the period. Readings, discussions and written assignments are in Russian.

462. 20th-Century Russian Literature Survey (in Russian)
(3-0-3) Dingea, Gasperetti
Prerequisite: 202 or the equivalent.
Surveys the literary innovation and political suppression of literature that defined Russia in the 20th century. Introduces such movements/periods as Symbolism, Acmeism, Futurism, the “Fellow Travelers,” Socialist Realism, and the “Thaw.”

471. Introduction to Russian Poetry (in Russian)
(3-0-3) Dingea
Prerequisite: 202 or the equivalent.
An introduction to Russian poetry, poetic movements, and verse forms. We will survey the major periods and styles of Russian poetry, including Classicism and the Baroque (18th century), Romanticism and the post-Romantics (19th century), and the early Modernist poetry of the pre-Revolutionary period (including Symbolism, Acmeism, and Futurism), as well as later 20th-century Russian poetry. Readings will include poems by Derzhavin, Pushkin, Pavlova, Zhukovskii, Tsiutchev, Nekrasov, Blok, Akhmatova, Mandel’shtam, Pasternak, Khlebnikov, Maakovskii, Tsvetaeva, Vysotskii, Brodskii, and others. Emphasis will be placed on the evolution of verse forms and poetics, as we attempt to fathom the extraordinary power of the Russian poetic word in the context of Russian society, history, and culture. Students will be required to write short compositions in Russian, make oral presentations, and translate selected passages from assigned works.

491. Evil and the Lie (English and German)
(3-0-3) Profit
Prerequisite: Four semesters of German or the equivalent.
Everyone from the ancients to the most technologically conscious CEOs tell us that those who succeed know the difference between the important and the unimportant and they allocate their time accordingly. But how does one make these choices? If in fact success and happiness are synonymous, as some would claim, which way lies success, lies happiness? And what are the guideposts? What really matters? In an age such as ours, does anything have lasting value? Do I really matter? If I am most assuredly defined by my beliefs and my deeds, what then do I believe, what do I do? In the final analysis, who am I? If literature, as so many maintain, not only mirrors but also foreshadows world events, how have several 20th-century authors representing diverse national traditions formulated the answers to these seminal questions? Readings will include F. Scott Fitzgerald, The Great Gatsby; Albert Camus, The Stranger; Max Frisch, Homo Faber.

Program of Studies. The Department of History offers courses for undergraduates designed to expose them to life in the past as it was experienced in Europe, Asia, and the Americas. In addition to courses that contribute to an understanding of Western culture and its roots, the department also offers courses on Middle Eastern, East Asian, Native American and African American history, as well as ones that explore the historical dimensions of issues of race, class and gender. Courses offered consist of lectures and seminars that require students to develop a critical appreciation of primary and secondary texts, and skills in historical writing.

To major in history, a student must take a total of 24 semester hours (eight courses) numbered 300 or above and distributed as follows:
* six hours in Africa/Asia/Europe (pre-1600)
* six hours in Africa/Asia/Europe (post-1600)
* six hours in the history of the Americas
* six hours of electives

The study of history provides an ideal context within which students can sharpen their analytical and verbal skills. To encourage this process, every history major is required to enroll in at least one departmental seminar (491-493), a course that will require students to engage in extensive research and write a major essay.

Qualified students, with the permission of the instructor, may elect courses in the 500 series of the history department (see the Graduate School Bulletin of Information). Work in one of the concentrations or area studies programs described below may also be undertaken in conjunction with the Department of History.

History Honors Program. The history department offers a special program of study, the History Honors Program, for the most talented and motivated history majors. The program, consisting of a three-course sequence, began in the spring 2002 semester with an inaugural class of 15 juniors. Succeeding classes of junior history majors will be invited to join in the fall semester of each academic year.

A student in the History Honors Program will take 30 hours, rather than 24, of upper-division history courses to satisfy both the Honors Program and History Major requirements. The History Honors student will follow the regular program of studies above and, in addition, take HIST 495H, 494H, and 499H, replacing HIST 491-493.

Each History Honors student also will select a field of concentration (pre-1600 Europe, post-1600 Asia, the Americas, Intellectual History, etc.) and will take three courses (nine hours) in this field to complete the program.

Course Descriptions. The following course descriptions give the number and title of each course. Lecture hours per week, laboratory and/or tutorial hours per week and credits each semester are in parentheses. The instructor’s name is also included.

111. Western Civilization I
(3-0-3) Noble, O’Leary
A survey of the major events and issues in Western history from the emergence of civilization in Egypt and Mesopotamia until the 15th century. Subjects studied at length include Greek culture, democracy, and imperialism; the Roman Republic and Empire; and the emergence of the Christian civilization of the Middle Ages.

112. Western Civilization II
(3-0-3) Bergen, Crago, Hamburg, Kselman
This course will examine important topics in European history from the Renaissance to the present: the evolution of statecraft in Machiavelli’s Florence; the impact of the Reformation on European society and political life; the Scientific Revolution and the Enlightenment; the French Revolution and its aftermath; the development of liberalism, socialism, feminism and nationalism in the 19th century; the evolution of 20th-century warfare; the Russian Revolution of 1917; the bloody history of fascism and Nazism; the Holocaust; the "atomic age," the Cold War and the collapse of the Soviet empire.

115. The Growth of the American Nation
(3-0-3) Dowd, Waldstreicher, Turner
A survey of the social, cultural and political history of the British North American colonies and the United States to the close of the Civil War. Organized around the question of American "nationhood," topics include Indian, European and African encounters; regional and sectional divergence; religious impulses and revivals; imperial conflict and revolution; constitutional development and argument; immigration and nativism; the frontier hypothesis and westward expansion; slavery and emancipation; sectional division and the Civil War.
116. The Development of Modern America
(3-0-3) Blantz, McGreevy, Miscamble, Bederman, Brady
The purpose of this course is to provide the student with a basic understanding of the political, diplomatic, social, and economic development of the United States from the end of the Civil War to the present. Major topics to be covered include the industrial revolution of the late 19th century, the Populist movement, the progressive presidencies of Theodore Roosevelt and Woodrow Wilson, the Great Depression, the causes and effects of World Wars I and II, the Cold War years of Presidents Harry Truman and Dwight Eisenhower, the New Frontier and Great Society, the Civil Rights Movement, Vietnam, President Richard Nixon and Watergate, and the presidency of Ronald Reagan. The class format will be two lectures and one discussion session per week.

121. Ancient Greece and Rome
(3-0-3) Mazurek
In this course, first-year students will explore the history and culture of ancient Greece and Rome through study of texts central to the Classical Greek and Latin literary traditions. Major authors to be read include Homer, Sophocles, Plato, and Vergil. Important topics to be considered throughout the semester include concepts of the divine: heroism and virtue; concepts of gender; democracy, empire, and civic identity. Students should come away from the course with deeper appreciation for the Classical roots of their own social, intellectual, and religious lives.

150. Modern Russia 1600 to Present
(3-0-3) Hamburg, Lyandres
This course is an introduction to the turbulent political and cultural history of modern Russia. Lectures will treat such topics as the rise and fall of the Russian empire, the bloody legacy of the Soviet Union and Russia's current experiment with constitutional government and capitalism.

155. Collapse of European Communism
(3-0-3) Crago
Why did certain countries become communist regimes after World War II? And how did communism collapse there? This course will explore the rise and fall of communism in Eastern Europe from World War II to 1989. Emphasis will be placed on the Hungarian, Czech, Polish, and Yugoslav experiences. Students will examine the period by reading traditional historical and political writings as well as examining literature and films from the period. The reading includes approximately five books. Although a lecture class, the instructor has reserved Fridays for in-class discussion. Students will also be expected to sit for a midterm and final examination and to complete a 10- to 15-page research paper.

180. History University Seminar
(3-0-3) Staff
An introduction to the seminar method of instruction which explores the major methodologies of the historical discipline and which accorns the organization and expression of arguments suggested by readings in historical topics.

214. Europe from the French Revolution to World War I
(3-0-3) Bergen
This course explores Europe from 1789 to 1914, 150 years that included both the peak of European world power and its unprecedented wars of self-destruction. We will address the wars, revolutions, ideas, social movements, and the individuals that shaped Europe from the French Revolution to World War I. Nationalism, liberalism, conservatism, socialism, imperialism, racism, anti-Semitism, and feminism are among the intellectual and political trends to be examined. The course will include lectures as well as small group discussions based on reading of primary sources and literary works by writers such as Shelley, Marx, Flaubert, Dostoevsky, Ibsen, Freud, Kafka, Woolf, and Levi. We will also watch several classic films.

222. Burned at the Stake: Medieval Heresy
(3-0-3) O'Leary
This class will cover the principal heresies of the Middle Ages, beginning with the teachings and developments of early heretical movements. Students will investigate what constituted a heresy and how “orthodox” Christianity responded to such challenges. Requirements include participation in class discussion, a final exam, and a paper on a topic of the student's choice.

224. The Holocaust
(3-0-3) Bergen
In this lecture/discussion class we will study the Nazi German program of mass killings that has come to be known as the Holocaust. We will explore the ideas, decisions, and actions that culminated in the murder of an estimated hundred thousand people deemed handicapped, half a million Roma (Gypsies), and six million European Jews. The role of historical prejudices, the impact of National Socialist ideology and leadership, and the crucial factor of the war itself will all be considered. We will address the experiences of those targeted for annihilation as well as the actions of perpetrators and the role of others: bystanders, witnesses, and rescuers. At the same time we will examine how attacks on other groups — for example, homosexuals, Polish intellectuals, Soviet prisoners of war, Jehovah’s Witnesses, and Afro-Germans — fit into the overall Nazi scheme for a “new world order.” The legacy of the Holocaust after 1945 will be discussed as well.

235. Irish American Experience
(3-0-3) Dolan
For sophomores only. This course will examine the history of the Irish in the United States. In many respects the Irish are the great success story in American history. They have moved from the shantytowns of urban America to the board rooms of Wall Street. Along the way they have left their mark on American politics, literature, religion, and the labor movement. These are the areas that the course will study. Since the story must begin in Ireland, one-third of the course will examine the history of modern Ireland so that the students can better understand the Irish experience in the United States. After studying the famine of the 1840s, the course will turn to the theme of emigration in order to bring the Irish to the United States. Then it will study the great themes of Irish American history—politics, literature, religion, and labor. The heart of the course will be the century of immigration, 1820-1920.

240. Vikings
(3-0-3) O'Leary
The Vikings are notorious in European history for plunder and pillage, pagan savagery, and horned helmets. Participants in this lecture-discussion course will study the impact of Viking invaders in Europe and North America over four centuries, and will consider whether Scandinavians made any real contribution to the societies they terrorized. Discussion (including heated debates) will be based on medieval primary sources from England, Ireland, France, and Russia. Scandinavian life at home and the possible reasons for migration will also be considered, as background to the more exciting events abroad. The importance of archaeological evidence (including art), and modern treatments of Vikings in film and literature, will also be included.

246. History of Communication Technologies
(3-0-3) Staff
The Internet is creating a revolution in the ways we communicate and organize information. This course seeks to deepen our understanding of current issues about the access to information, ownership of ideas and the possibilities for change. We can gain a new perspective by examining the history of previous shifts in the technology of communication in ancient, medieval and early modern societies. We begin by learning about the effects that the earliest forms of writing had on ancient societies. Next, we discuss the role of Christianity in the transfer from the scroll to the codex. The third and larger section explores the development of different kinds of books, from illuminated manuscripts like the fabulous Book of Kells and tiny books for private prayer to mass-produced books for university students. We then examine the shifts following the invention of the printing press in the 15th century. Finally, we consider the current revolution of cyberspace.
250. Modern Russia to the Present (3-0-3) Hamburg, Lyandres
This course is an introduction to the turbulent political and cultural history of modern Russia. Lectures will treat such topics as the rise and fall of the Russian empire, the bloody legacy of the Soviet Union and Russia’s current experiment with constitutional government and capitalism.

258. American Art: History, Identity, Culture (3-0-3) Schlereth
Introductory and historical overview of the role that several arts (architecture, painting, sculpture) played in American cultural history, 1640-1940. In addition to surveying major high style trends, attention will also be given to selected regional, folk, vernacular and popular artistic traditions.

261. American Catholic Experience (3-0-3) Appleby, Cummings
A survey of the history of Roman Catholicism in the United States from colonial times to the present, with emphasis on the 20th-century experience. The first half of the course covers the Catholic missions and settlements in the New World, Republican-era Catholicism’s experiment with democracy, and the immigrant church from 1820 to 1950. The second half of the course focuses on the preparations for, and impact of, the Second Vatican Council (1962-65). Assigned reading includes a packet of articles and primary sources about the Liturgical Renewal, Catholic Action, social justice movements and other preconciliar developments.

265. Visual America (3-0-3) Schlereth
This course explores dimensions of several types of visual expression: popular photography, genre and historical painting, chromolithography, commercial arts in American culture history from Louis Daguerre’s development of photography in 1839 to the public exhibition of television at the 1939 New York World’s Fair.

270. The Civil Rights Movement (3-0-3) Pierce
There may not be a term in American society which is as recognized yet misunderstood as “civil rights.” Often civil rights are conflated with human rights, even though each is distinct from the other. During the semester, we will trace the Civil Rights Movement in the United States during the 20th century and its lasting impact on American society. We will do so using as many media as possible. Fortunately, we will have the opportunity to study an important part of American history in significant detail. The time span we cover will not be that great, but the issues we investigate challenge the founding principles of American society to its core.

285. King Arthur in History and Literature (3-0-3) Boulton
This course, intended to introduce undergraduates to one of the major themes as well as to the interdisciplinary approaches characteristic of Medieval Studies, is a team-taught examination of the development and influence of the legend of Arthur, King of Britain, both in history and in literature.

305. Greek History (3-0-3) Vacca
The primary purpose of the course is to provide a basic narrative history of Greece from the Bronze Age through the Roman conquest. Another purpose is systematic insight into special problems of two key phases of Greek development, the archaic and classical periods. The rapid growth of the city-state and the cultural ideals and problems that led to the invention of philosophy and tragedy are considered. The course then takes up the institutions and policies of democratic and imperialistic Athens and the political theories they embodied. The class ends with a look at the new Hellenistic world and the impact of Greek values on Christianity.

306. Roman History (3-0-3) Mazurek
An introduction to ancient Roman history, tracing the development of Roman civilization through political, religious and social institutions of the Republic and Empire. Students read original sources in translation as well as secondary works by modern historians.

307. Middle Ages I (3-0-3) Van Engen
This course is designed as a topical introduction to European history between 500 and 1000. It will examine the evolution of various forms of economic systems, societies, and civilizations in Western Europe during this period, concentrating on France, Italy, England, and Germany. History majors as well as students interested in a historical introduction to medieval civilization are welcome.

308. Middle Ages II (3-0-3) Constable, Van Engen
This course is designed as a topical introduction to European history between 1000 and 1500. It will examine the evolution of various forms of economic systems, societies, and civilizations in Western Europe during this period, concentrating on France, Italy, England, and Germany. History majors as well as students interested in a historical introduction to medieval civilization are welcome.

310. 100 Years’ War (1337-1453) (3-0-3) Staff
This course surveys the history of France and England during the 14th and early 15th centuries. Major themes include the dynastic claims of English kings upon the crown of France, the Black Death, the rise of the Burgundian state, the growth of a middle class, the question of growing national identity, and new trends in the arts.

311. Gender/Sexuality/Power: Medieval Europe (3-0-3) Biddick
What has gender to do with sexuality and how can we think about its entanglements in terms of a history of power? How do shifting borders between what counts as masculine and what counts as feminine produce other kinds of bodies in medieval societies: bodies that don’t matter? Using original sources and material remains produced from the third through 15th centuries, together with current feminist and queer theory, students will think about the work of gendered embodiment and the production of bodies that don’t matter.

311E. Western Civilization I (3-0-3) Noble, O’Leary
For students intending to seek certification in secondary teaching through the Saint Mary’s Education Program only. A survey of the major events and issues in Western history from the emergence of civilization in Egypt and Mesopotamia until the 15th century. Subjects studied at length include Greek culture, democracy, and imperialism; the Roman Republic and Empire; and the emergence of the Christian civilization of the Middle Ages.

312E. Western Civilization II (3-0-3) Bergen, Crago, Hamburg, Kselman
For students intending to seek certification in secondary teaching through the Saint Mary’s Education Program only. See HIST 112.

315E. The Growth of the American Nation (3-0-3) Dowd, Waldstreicher, Turner
For students intending to seek certification in secondary teaching through the Saint Mary’s Education Program only. See HIST 115.

316E. The Development of Modern America (3-0-3) Blantz, McGreevy, Miscamble, Bederman, Brady
For students intending to seek certification in secondary teaching through the Saint Mary’s Education Program only. See HIST 116.

314. England Since 1789 (3-0-3) Sullivan
The course involves reading and thinking about and discussing both the history and the historical interpretations of some major elements in the development of modern English politics, society, and culture.
316. Medieval Towns and Urban Life
(3-0-3) Constable
This lecture course will cover the structure and development of urban centers in Europe and the Mediterranean World from the Late Antique period until the 14th century. The course will begin with a general discussion of modern urban theory together with ancient and medieval conceptions of what makes a “city.” From this point, we will track the history of urban life in medieval Europe, Byzantium and the Islamic World, with lectures devoted to urban geography, architecture, society, economy and demography. We will also look in depth at medieval life in individual cities, including London, Paris, Cairo and Constantinople, in order to consider variations in urban society and institutions in different regions.

320. The Making of Modern Europe
(3-0-3) Sullivan
This course traces the development of Europe as it emerged from the Middle Ages and slowly reoriented forward to the modern era. Our focus will be on the growth of the modern state. From an interdisciplinary perspective we investigate critical changes in politics, science, economics, religion and the arts which helped usher in the new European system. Attention will also be paid to the segments of society who stood apart from many of these innovations affecting the European state. We will seek to understand the place of women, Jews and other “outsiders” in this new European order.

323. History of Modern Mexico
(3-0-3) Beatty
This course examines the complex nation that is Mexico in the 20th century, its challenges and its prospects. Focusing primarily on the period since 1870, we will study the social, economic, political and cultural forces that have shaped the history of the United States’ southern neighbor.

325. Enlightenment in Europe
(3-0-3) Sullivan
By studying works as diverse as Vico’s New Science, Mozart’s Don Giovanni, Voltaire’s Philosophical Dictionary, Turner’s Sun Rising Through Vapour and Laclos’s Dangerous Liaisons, we first try to map the sheer variety of the cultural achievements of Europeans, from Dublin to Naples and Koenigsberg to Madrid, during the long 18th century (c. 1687-1807). Then we critically analyze some of the major scholarly efforts to reduce and organize into some unitary movement, usually called “the Enlightenment,” the stubborn complexity, and frequent contradiction, of the ways in which self-consciously modern, or enlightened, Europeans in their prose, poetry, paintings, and music represented power, knowledge, faith, emotions, history, and progress.

326. Irish History I
(3-0-3) Smyth
This course consists of lectures and readings examining Irish political history from the beginning of the Tudor Reconquest to the enactment of the legislative union in 1801. Attention is given to colonization, religious conflict, the Ulster Plantation, political and constitutional reactions to British government policies, and the rise of Protestant patriotism.

327. Making of the Irish Nation II
(3-0-3) Smyth
This course will consist of lectures and readings examining Irish political history and Anglo-Irish relations from 1801 up to and including the current conflict in contemporary Northern Ireland. Attention will be given to religious conflict, the development of romantic and revolutionary nationalism, the changing nature of Anglo-Irish relations, the Irish American dimension, and the special problems of the north.

332. History of the U.S. South, 1876-Present
(3-0-3) Pratt
This survey relies on cultural, social, and political analysis to develop an understanding of the region and its identity. Circumstances and events unique to the South will be evaluated in context of the common experiences of the United States.

332M. 20th-Century Jerusalem
(3-0-3) Staff
This course will focus on the city of Jerusalem and examine the religious and national contestation over the holy city during the 20th century. There is an overwhelming body of literature on Jerusalem. The course will be limited to exploring the role Jerusalem has played during the 20th century in four distinct political eras: Ottoman rule, the British Mandate for Palestine, and Hashemite Jordanian and Israeli control in Jerusalem. In the first two situations, Jerusalem was part of a great empire; in the last two, part of a modern nation-state. We will look at the role of religion and holy places within these political systems as well as consider national aspirations, whether met or unmet. The course will also consider the Palestinians and their role in the competition for holy city/national capital-in-the-making.

333. British History: 1660-1800
(3-0-3) Smyth
This course of lectures and readings concentrates on British history from the restoration of monarchy in 1660 to the great crisis detonated by the French Revolution and war in the 1790s. The other themes addressed include Protestant dissent, political ideologies, the role of parliament and the rise of the radical parliamentary reform movement.

343. Intellectuals and Politics in Latin American Society
(3-0-3) Jaksic
This course will discuss the role of intellectuals in the politics of modern Latin America. It will identify and define who is an intellectual in Latin America, review the range of their concerns, and ascertain the impact of their ideas on their respective nations. Themes to be addressed include the role of intellectuals in nation-building in 19th-century Latin America, the participation of intellectuals in electoral politics, their role in university reform movements, and their opposition to military dictatorship, among others. Intellectuals will also be seen in the larger context of such movements as liberalism, positivism, Marxism, and Christian democracy, among others.

345. Europe from the French Revolution to World War I
(3-0-3) Kedman
During this time Europe changed dramatically in ways that shaped the 20th century: political reform movements advocating nationalism, democracy, and socialism challenged established regimes; the industrial revolution led to massive changes in society and the economy, including the emergence of a large and affluent middle class and an industrial proletariat; European states consolidated power and mobilized popular support and an advanced technology for wars in Europe and throughout the world, into which they expanded as colonial powers; writers, artists and composers reacted to the changes and conflicts with novels, paintings, songs, and symphonies that, in their variety of styles, suggest the vitality and anxiety of this period.

346. Making Australia
(3-0-3) Constable
This course will provide both a broad coverage of Australian history and an analysis of some issues and developments of special significance in contemporary Australia.

348. Modern Japan
(3-0-3) Thomas
This introduction to modern Japanese history focuses on political, social, economic, and military affairs in Japan from around 1600 to the early post-WWII period. It considers such paradoxes as samurai bureaucrats, entrepreneurial peasants, upper-class revolutionaries, and Asian fascists. The course has two purposes: (1) to provide a chronological and structural framework for understanding the debates over modern Japanese history, and (2) to develop the skill of reading texts analytically to discover the argument being made. The assumption operating both in the selection of readings and in the lectures is that Japanese history, as with all histories, is the site of controversy. Our efforts at this introductory level will be dedicated to understanding the contours of some of the most important of these controversies and judging, as far as possible, the evidence brought to bear in them.
352. Gilded Age and Progressive Era
(3-0-3) McGreavy, Cummings
Through discussion and lectures, students examine the emergence of a recognizably modern United States. Topics examined will include the emergence of the corporation, progressive reforms, the changing contours of American religion, the character of the New South, the battle for women’s suffrage, developments in the arts, and American involvement in the First World War.

353. Polish and Lithuanian Commonwealth
(3-0-3) Crago
This course will survey the history of the Polish and Lithuanian Commonwealth from its origins in the 1386 dynastic union of Jogailo, Grand Duke of Lithuania, with Hedvig, the daughter of Polish king, Louis the Great (1370-1382), through the transformation into a political union at Lublin in 1569 to the collapse of the Commonwealth which culminated in three partitions at the end of the 18th century. Special emphasis will be placed on the political processes which transformed the Commonwealth into one of the most democratic countries in the world, but also ultimately contributed to its decline. Attention, too, will be paid to the wars which ravaged the Commonwealth, including those with Muscovy, Sweden, the Ottoman Empire, and with the peoples of what today is modern Ukraine.

356. American Social History
(3-0-3) Staff
This upper-division course examines the social history of the United States. Format may include lectures, readings, discussions, exams and a paper.

360M. Media and American Culture from the Age of Print to the Internet
(3-0-3) Waldstreicher
This course examines the myths and realities of media in the American past and present, paying particular attention to the ways in which old media and new have combined to change our lives, and the ways different groups of Americans have used various media to make history.

362M. Origins of American Political Traditions
(3-0-3) Waldstreicher
The ideas, movements, and structures that shaped the development of American politics (and, arguably, American society) from the late colonial period until the eve of the Civil War. Topics will include theories of politics and society (monarchy, colonialism, republicanism, liberalism, democracy); political parties and their ideologies; constitutionalism; presidential leadership; social movements; rebellions; nationalism, regionalism and localism; and the popular political practices that made politics part of everyday life.

369. Jacksonian America
(3-0-3) Graff
This course explores the early 19th-century history of the United States, from the close of the War of 1812 to the coming of the Civil War (1815-1850). Although the era and course take their name from President Andrew Jackson, we will cover much more than national politics and affairs of state. We will explore the birth of mass political parties, conflicts between nationalism and sectionalism, early industrialization and the rise of class conflict, the development of slavery and antislavery, changing gender roles and the rise of feminism, evangelical religion and reform, and Native American resistance and removal. The course will emphasize active participation by students through regular discussion and frequent writing assignments.

371. Survey of African American History I
(3-0-3) Pierce
This course is a survey of the history of African Americans, beginning with an examination of their west African origins and ending with the Civil War era. We will discuss the 14th and 15th centuries, west African kingdoms, forms of domestic slavery and west African cultures, the Atlantic slave trade, early slave societies in the Caribbean, slavery in colonial America, the beginnings of African American cultures in the north and south during and after the revolutionary era, slave resistance and rebellions, the political economy of slavery and resulting sectional disputes, the significance of “bloody Kansas” and the Civil War.

372. Survey of African American History II
(3-0-3) Pierce
This course will survey the history of African Americans from 1865 to 1980. Specifically, this course will focus on the problems of Reconstruction in the South after the Civil War, the adjustments and reactions of African Americans to freedom, the economic exploitation of sharecropping, northern black communities at the end of the 19th century, the migration of black Southerners to northern urban areas, black political leadership, the Civil Rights Movement, current examples of institutional racism and affirmative action in America.

375. Anglo-American Thought
(3-0-3) Turner
A survey of the intellectual history of Britain and English-speaking America from around 1600 to the mid-19th century, including European backgrounds and contexts. Emphasis on writings about religion, government, natural science, education and human nature.

377. Engendering War, Business, and Law
(3-0-3) Biddick
During the 12th century the Anglo-Norman royal court made revolutionary advances in killing, counting and judging at the same time that they patronized the emergence of Arthurian romance in historical writing. History textbooks usually compartmentalize the history of war, accounting, the law, and romance. This course, instead, asks what they have in common, specifically, how they were engendered on the bodies of imaginary dead maidens, cannibalized Muslims, and tortured Jews.

378. Polish History I: From the Jagiellonians to Stanislaw Augustus
(3-0-3) Crago
This course will examine Polish history from the union of Lithuania with Poland in 1386 to the partitions of Poland in 1772, 1793, and 1795. In other words, the course will survey Polish history from the period when Poland emerged as a unique and great European state through the period when Poland experienced political and social decline and succumbed to political extinction. Topics to be examined may include: the growth of unprecedented parliamentary institutions; religious toleration in the age of the Reformation and the Counter Reformation; the emergence of unprecedented political freedoms for the nobility; the Renaissance; the “second serfdom”; the Commonwealth’s military exploits; the crisis of Polish democracy in the 17th and 18th centuries; Polish “orientalism” and “Sarmatianism”; and the Polish Enlightenment.

379. European Women in the 20th Century
(3-0-3) Bergen
This course explores European history of the 20th century as it has been shaped, experienced and interpreted by women. Using a variety of sources—memoirs, government documents, novels, films and newspaper accounts—we will examine women’s lives from the turn of the century to the present day. Themes to be addressed include women and war, the women’s movements, wealth and poverty, paid and unpaid work, women’s bodies and reproductive issues, ethnicity, religion, and popular representations of femininity. Rather than provide a generalized survey, the course will focus on different societies and regions as case studies for specific issues.

380. East-Central Europe I
(3-0-3) Crago
A survey of the history of East-Central Europe from A.D. 966 to the partitions of Poland. The lecture will place special emphasis on the political, social and cultural histories of Poles, Czechs, Slovaks, Croats and Hungarians.
This course will examine the history of paid and unpaid labor in the United States from colonial times to the near present. We will seek to understand how working people both shaped—and were shaped by—the American Revolution, the debates over slavery and free labor culminating in the Civil War and Reconstruction, the rise of big business, the creation of a national welfare state, the Cold War-era repression of the left, and continuing debates over the meanings of work, citizenship, and democracy. Throughout the course, we will devote considerable time to the organizations workers created to advance their own interests, namely the labor movement. We will also pay special attention to the complicated yet crucial connections between work and racial and gender identities. Specific topics may include: slavery, farm labor, women’s domestic work, trade unions, questions of industrial democracy, the role of radicalism and the challenges confronting workers in the current era of corporate globalization and anti-sweatshop activism.

381. East-Central Europe II
(3-0-3) Crago
A survey of the history of East-Central Europe from the partitions of Poland to the outbreak of World War II. The lecture will place special emphasis on the political, social and cultural histories of Poles, Czechs, Slovaks, Croats, and Hungarians.

382. Eastern Europe Since 1945
(3-0-3) Crago
The course surveys the emergence of communist Eastern Europe in the wake of World War II and then explores the seminal developments which contributed to the collapse of communism. Emphasis will be placed on the Hungarian, Czech, Polish, and Yugoslav experiences. Students in the course will examine the evolution in Eastern European society by reading traditional historical and political writings as well as drawing on literary and film accounts of the period.

383. 19th- and 20th-Century Polish History
(3-0-3) Crago
This course will examine the history of Poland since the partitions of the Polish state (1772) until contemporary times.

384. Modern European Diplomacy
(3-0-3) Crago
This course will investigate some of the main problems in the history of European relations from the middle of the 19th century to the present. The emphasis will be on the patterns of political interaction between and among the European powers (Britain, France, Germany, Austria-Hungary, Russia and Italy). We shall also examine their respective military strategies, both in peacetime and in war, and whether those strategies changed over time. Our other concern will be to place European relations with the context of the great-power system as a whole.

385M. American Political Traditions Since 1865
(3-0-3) McGreery
Students will investigate the political debates—and simultaneous examinations of democracy’s character—that have animated American reformers and intellectuals since the Civil War. The focus will be on these political traditions, not the studies of voter behavior or policy implementation that also constitute an important part of political history. The course will begin with discussion of the character of Reconstruction, and move through the “social question” of the late 19th century, Progressive reform in the early 20th century, the New Deal, the origins of modern conservatism, and various post-World War II social reform movements. Readings will include court cases, memoirs, speeches and a sampling of the philosophical and historical literature.

386. Europe Since 1945
(3-0-3) Wegs
This course introduces students to the economic, social aspects of post-World War II Europe. Specific topics include the Cold War, the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe, European unity, economic and social change, 1968, thought and culture since 1945 and the revolutionary events of 1989-90.

387. Environment and Environmentalism in History
(3-0-3) Hamlin
This course is an introduction to the new field of environmental history. In recent decades, historians have begun to actively explore the past sensibilities of various groups toward the quality of their air, water and land; the passionate discussions of philosophers, theologians and social and natural scientists about resource use, the safety of the environment. Historians have also increasingly paid attention to the ways environmental factors have affected the course of history: the effects of the distribution of water, wood and minerals and of changes in climate or endemic disease. This course ranges widely in methodology from the history of ideas to paleoclimatology, geographically from the ancient near east to modern America, topically from wood-cutting rights in medieval France to the rise of the organic farming movement and water-allocation laws in the 20th-century American West.

391. Religions in China
(3-0-3) Murray
This course will examine the religions of China from both the historical and cultural perspective. It will focus on Confucianism, Taoism, and Buddhism.

392. History of Christianity to 1500
(3-0-3) Sullivan
A survey of the development of Christianity from late antiquity to the eve of the 16th-century Reformation. Emphases include processes of Christianization, definitions of prescribed and proscribed beliefs and practices, institutional elaboration, relations with imperial and royal authority, impact of and on culture, and varieties of religious behaviors. Although the history of the Latin (Catholic) church is highlighted, the dynamics and consequences of its separation first from the Oriental and then from the Orthodox churches will be examined. The course aspires to achieve a routine of interactive lectures.

393. History of Christianity II, 1600 to the Present
(3-0-3) Sullivan
A course surveying the development of modern Christianity, with emphasis on the West. Subjects include ideas and movements of reform, church government and structures, missionary enterprises, forms of spirituality and worship, and the political role and cultural impact of Christianity.

394. Medieval Middle East
(3-0-3) Cobb
This course offers a survey of Middle Eastern history from the rise of Islam in the seventh century A.D. until the rise of Mongol successor polities in the 15th century. The course is structured to cover political and cultural developments and their relationships with broader changes in society during the formative centuries of Islamic civilization.

395. Modern Middle East
(3-0-3) Cobb
This course surveys Middle Eastern history from 1500 to the present. The primary themes to be covered include the emergence and demise of the last Muslim unitary states; European colonial and imperial penetration of the Middle East in the 19th century; the social and cultural impact of imperialism; state-building in the 20th century; new ideologies/nationalisms; contemporary problems of political and economic development. We will also consider the most important movements of Islamic reform and revival over the past two centuries.

404. Mediterranean World, 400-1400
(3-0-3) Constable
This lecture course covers the history of the Mediterranean world from the fifth to the 15th century, from the fall of Rome to the fall of Constantinople. It examines both elements of unity and diversity found around the shores of the medieval Mediterranean. Many features, including climate, agriculture, a common Greco-Roman cultural heritage, and the sea itself served to unify the Mediterranean region, while others, such as religion and politics, created tensions and disunity. This course surveys the political history of Southern Europe, Byzantium, and the Islamic world and looks at specialized topics such as the crusades; commercial exchange; intellectual contacts between Christianity, Judaism and Islam; the impact of the plague;
Mediterranean families and the position of women; and Mediterranean food.

405. Chivalry, Faith and Splendor: The Court of Burgundy, 1363-1519
(3-0-3) Boulton
This course will examine the relationships between political power, Catholic Christianity (both official and popular), chivalry, and the fine arts, in the court of Dukes of Burgundy of the Valois line: the richest and most influential court of Latin Christendom of its day. It will be team-taught by members of several relevant departments.

406. Renaissance Europe
(3-0-3) Staff
This course will focus primarily on the city-states of Italy, especially Florence and Venice, from roughly 1500 to 1550. We will explore the social and economic foundations of the Italian Renaissance, its artistic and intellectual expressions (humanism and Neoplatonism), and the structures of power and the life of the family within the city-states. We will also devote attention to cultural and political developments in Germany, France, England and Spain, particularly the spread of humanism north of the Alps and the development of centralized monarchies, monarchies that would help to put an end to the Italian Renaissance.

410. The Reformation
(3-0-3) Staff
This course examines the great religious convulsion that gripped Europe in the 16th and 17th centuries. Chronologically, however, we will begin in the late medieval period as we consider important changes that were occurring in European culture and society culminating with Europe’s first Reformation, not in Germany but in Bohemia. We conclude by considering the relaxing of religious tensions in the late 17th century and concurrent growth of toleration and skepticism. Throughout the course we will consider religion as a dynamic that has a broad impact on society affecting not only personal belief but also the politics, social patterns, and the intellectual and cultural production of the early modern world.

412. Religious Movements in the High Middle Ages
(3-0-3) Van Engen
This course will study major religious movements in the high middle ages, that is, beginning about the year 1200 and concluding about 1450. Religious movements refers broadly to a series of both organized and dissenting groups that helped set the tone for religious life in the higher middle ages. The purpose of the course is less to offer survey-style “coverage” than to introduce students to representative groups and especially to the writings that came from these groups. The religious women, and it will end with Hussites, a massive rebellion against the medieval church. It will include such groups as the Franciscans, both the accepted conventional varieties and the dissenting spirituals; the so-called “Rhineland mystics”; and the “modern devotion.”

413. History/Fantasy/Colony
(3-0-3) Biddick
What is the relation of history, fantasy, colony? Using two major texts written in the 12th century (History of the Kings of Brittain and History and Topography of Ireland), we will analyze the fabrication of Englishness and the other written not only in the 12th century but also as a repeating problem in history, fantasy, colony in 19th- and 20th-century Britain.

414. Early Imperial Russia, 1700 to 1861
(3-0-3) Hamburg, Lyandres
This course explores the political, cultural and social history of Russia from Peter the Great’s reforms to the abolition of serfdom in 1861.

415. 20th-Century Russian History
(3-0-3) Hamburg, Lyandres
This course examines the birth of the Soviet state, the genesis and operation of the Stalinist system of government, post-Stalinist socialism and the end of the Soviet Union.

416. American Thought, Belief, and Values Since 1865
(3-0-3) Marsden
A study of Americans’ most characteristic American intellectual, moral, and religious beliefs, especially as expressed by leading thinkers, and of why these beliefs have flourished in the American cultural setting. Topics will include questions such as the competing authorities of faith and science, the search for truth in a pluralistic society, professional and popular philosophies including pragmatism and postmodernism, moral authority in democratic culture, social science and law, the relation of individuals to communities, the relation of American materialism to American beliefs, the outlooks of diverse sub-cultures, African-American outlooks, feminist perspectives, competing religious and secular faiths, and roles of various forms of Christianity and other religious beliefs in American life.

417. Dostoyevsky’s Russia
(3-0-3) Hamburg, Lyandres
This course will focus: 1. on Dostoyevsky’s life, his religious and ideological beliefs as articulated in major fictional and nonfictional works, his contributions to 19th-century debates about Russia’s place in the world and its historical “mission”; and 2. on the Russian social, religious and ideological context(s) in which Dostoyevsky operated. The reading will likely include Dostoyevsky’s Notes from the House of the Dead, Notes from the Underground, Crime and Punishment, The Idiot, and Brothers Karamazov.
418. Modern Russian Society and Culture I
(3-0-3) Lyndres
This course examines selected critical issues in the foundations of modern Russian society and culture from the late 19th through the first half of the 20th century. Lectures and discussions include such topics as late Imperial politics and society, cultural innovation of the “Silver Age,” World War I, Revolutions of 1917, creation of socialist society and culture, and the experience of the Stalinist terror.

420. Austria from the Hapsburgs to Haider
(3-0-3) Wegs
The course will examine the political, social and cultural history of Austria. It will begin with Austria’s dominant position in Europe under the Habsburgs after the Napoleonic wars and continue with the struggle against Germany for dominance in Europe in the late 19th century and the destruction of the Habsburg Monarchy in World War I. The 20th century section will include Austrian fascism in the interwar period, the Second World War, Austria’s rebirth following the war and present political, social and cultural history including the emergence of a right-wing populist group led by Jorg Haider. Course requirements will include a midterm and final examination and an extended historical essay.

421. Europe in the Nazi Era
(3-0-3) Bergen
This course will examine Germany and those parts of Europe under German control between 1933 and 1945. An important focal point will be the Holocaust and its origins, course and context. Topics to be covered include National Socialist ideology; Hitler’s rise to power; European anti-Semitism; women’s and men’s roles in the Third Reich; persecutions of homosexuals, Jehovah’s Witnesses, Communists, Slavs and others and their relation to the Shoah; World War II in Europe; the so-called Eu- thanasia program and the attack on Europe’s Gypsies; ghettosization, deportation and murder of Jews; collaboration, rescue and resistance inside and outside Germany; the collapse of the Nazi empire.

422. Germany and Austria Since 1870
(3-0-3) Bergens
The German history segment will include the imperial period of Bismarck and Emperor Wilhelm II, World War I, the Weimar Republic, the Nazi period and the post-1945 period. The Austrian segment will consider the decline and fall of the Habsburg Monarchy, the interwar turn to authoritarianism, the Nazi occupation and the post-1945 recovery.

423. 20th-Century German History
(3-0-3) Bergen
This course examines modern Germany from national unification in 1871 to the recent unification of the two Germanies and beyond. We will investigate cultural, political and social dimensions of Germany’s dynamic role in Europe and in the world.

424. Holocaust
(3-0-3) Bergen, Wegs
This course will combine lectures, discussions and films in an attempt to describe and reach some understanding of the Nazi policy of eliminating Europe’s Jewish population (The Holocaust). The course will consist of a background to German-Jewish relations before the Nazi period, the Nazi seizure of power and its impact on Germany’s Jewish population, World War II and the Holocaust, and the subsequent postwar problem of comprehending and coping with the Holocaust.

425. France in the Old Regime
(3-0-3) Kselman
In 1708, France, under the Sun King, Louis XIV, was the most powerful state in Europe. Louis’ court at Versailles was a brilliant cultural center envied by the rest of Europe, whose kings saw France as a model to be emulated. In 1789, the French Revolu- tion challenged and eventually destroyed the mon- archy, but the power of France nonetheless grew. By 1800, France under the leadership of the consul Napoleon was expanding rapidly in Europe and would eventually control an empire that included Spain, Italy and much of central Europe. This course examines French history from the establish- ment of the Bourbon family on the throne in 1589 to the rise of Napoleon in 1790s, with about one- third of the class concentrating on the revolution- ary events that began in 1789. The course is organized around major political developments and seeks to understand how the monarchy, so potent in 1700, could have collapsed less than a century later.

426. Modern France
(3-0-3) Kselman
This course will examine the political, social and cultural developments in France from Napoleon through the present. After a review of the legacy of the Revolution of 1789, students will explore the continuing importance of the revolutionary tradi- tion in France, which led to major upheavals in 1830, 1848, 1870 and 1968. The political history of France will be discussed in a context of social and economic development which produced class conflict that the state tried to control in a variety of ways, ranging from the repression of dissent to oc- casional flirtation with socialism. Social and politi- cal developments will also be related to changes that occurred in private life, in family relations, and in the use of leisure time.

427. Medieval Spain
(3-0-3) Constable
This course, a smaller reading plus discussion course, examines the history of Spain in the Middle Ages. Topics to explore include the arrival of Islam, the Christian Reconquest, Iberian Jewish life, Ibe- rian economy and urban life under Christian rule, the idea of Iberian society, and Jews and Muslims under Christian rule.

428. Anglo-Saxon England
(3-0-3) O’Leary
In this course (based on lectures and discussion), students will gain an appreciation of the major de- velopments in England from pre-Christian times until the Norman conquest in the 11th century. Through weekly discussion of primary and secondary sources — political, ecclesiastical, and literary — students will form their own judgments on the principal issues in English history. We will also consider England’s political and cultural relations with her neighbors, especially Ireland, Scotland, Wales and France.

429. Late Imperial Russia
(3-0-3) Hamburg
This course examines Russian history from the end of serfdom in 1861 to the revolutions of 1917. The instructor will acquaint students not only with the political history of Russia in this turbulent period, but also with topics that are sometimes neglected in broad surveys: the resemblances between Russian serfdom and American slavery; the history of family life, gender relations and sexuality in Russia; the role of religion in defining Russian identities; the psychological underpinnings of political radicalism and terrorism; the difficult relationships between various ethnic groups in the “prison of peoples.” Course requirements will include: a short essay, a midterm examination and a final examination. No prior knowledge of Russian history required.

431. The Nobility of Medieval England and France
(3-0-3) Boulton
This course is intended both to introduce students to the historiography of the dominant stratum of English society from the time of the Anglo-Saxon invasions of the fifth and sixth centuries to the Tu- dor period and to the problems and methods of historical research and analysis relative to the pe- riod and area in question. The course will concen- trate on the period after the Norman Conquest of 1066 and will examine the development of the vari- ous strata of the noble class in England after that event: the baronage and peerage, the knightage and the lesser “gentry” of squires and gentlemen.

433M. Europe Between the Wars
(3-0-3) Staff
Between the end of the First World War and the beginning of the Second, there were only 20 years. But during this short period were Hitler, Stalin, the Great Crisis, the League of Nations, and much more. Understanding the present requires a knowl- edge of these pivotal years.

435. Medieval Ireland
(3-0-3) O’Leary
This course comprises a survey of the history and culture of the Irish and the other Celtic peoples from the Neolithic era to approximately A.D. 1500. We will explore the main documentary sources in translation—mythological and historical, ecclesiastical and secular—as well as discussing the importance of the archaeological evidence.
436M. Foreign Influences In Medieval Ireland
(3-0-3) O’Leary
This course is a broadly-based exploration of Ireland and her neighbors from the eighth century to the 16th. Beginning with the long-term consequences of Viking activity in Ireland and England, students will consider in detail the reasons behind the Norman conquests of Ireland and Britain, and the profound French political, social and cultural influence on the region. We will then focus on Irish interprovincial warfare, especially the extent to which the real Brian Boru corresponded to the saintly champion portrayed in some historical sources. We will assess relations among Ireland, England, Wales and France by examining questions of church and state; and investigate why propaganda and “forged” history became predominant in the British Isles in the 12th century. The course also includes analysis of English colonization in Ireland from English, Irish and Scottish perspectives; and assessment of Gaelic politics and culture during the Tudor conquest.

440M. The Vikings
(3-0-3) O’Leary
The Vikings are notorious in European history for plunder and pillage, pagan savagery, and horned helmets. Participants in this lecture-and-discussion course will study the impact of Viking invaders in Europe and North America over four centuries, and will consider whether Scandinavians made any real contribution to the societies they terrorized. Discussion (including heated debates) will be based on medieval primary sources from England, Ireland, France, and Russia. Scandinavian life at home and the possible reasons for migration will also be considered, as background to the more exciting events abroad. The importance of archaeological evidence (including art), and modern treatments of Vikings in film and literature, will also be included.

442. Nineteenth-Century Ireland
(3-0-3) Staff
Drawing on monographs and general studies, this course invites students to consider how different social groups experienced the profound changes that transformed 19th-century Ireland. Although the course traces political developments, it pays equal attention to socioeconomic and cultural issues, including the shift from high fertility to sexual restraint; patterns of emigration, consumption and social unrest; improvements in education and literacy; linguistic change; changing devotional practices and cultural “revival” in the late 1800s.

442M. The Emergence of Nationalism in Latin America
(3-0-3) Jaksic
This course provides an introduction to the major themes of 19th-century Latin American history. It provides an overview of the colonial background to the independence struggle that engulfed the region in the early part of the century, describes the motivations, and in many cases reluctance, of the colonies to disengage from the Spanish empire, and the legacies and opportunities for the construction of a new social, political and economic order in the region. The course examines the influence of regionalism in the emergence of the new nations, and pays particular attention to the impact of liberalism on social, political and economic structures in the region.

443. African History I
(3-0-3) Osborn
Interaction, adaptation, creativity, innovation and change have characterized the history of Africa from the earliest times. State building, trade relations and the impact of world religions such as Islam and Christianity have acted as catalysts for change across the continent. This course explores these themes by drawing from a variety of regional examples that span the period before 1800. We will examine ancient Egypt and the early Christian kingdom of Axum (Ethiopia), the Swahili coast and Great Zimbabwe. We will discuss trans-Saharan trade and Islam in the kingdoms of the western Sudan, the introduction of Christianity in the Congo, and the settlement of the Cape of Good Hope. This course will conclude by investigating the development of the Atlantic Slave Trade and the arrival of Europeans to sub-Saharan Africa from the fifteenth to the 18th century.

444. African History Since 1800
(3-0-3) Osborn
This course on the social and political history of Africa begins by investigating the legacies of the trans-Atlantic slave trade and the dynamism that shaped the era of so-called legitimate commerce. Jihad, the rise of new states, cash crop production, missionary movements, the intensification of domestic African slavery, and the growth of European and black settler communities contributed to 19th-century processes of change in Africa. By the start of the 20th century, European powers laid claim to and colonized almost the whole of Africa. The attempts by Europeans to control Africans and their cultural, economic, and social lives often took brutal forms, but Africans nevertheless hindered and resisted the colonial project in both covert and overt ways. Analyzing European education, labor, and political policies sheds light on how the colonial state sought to remake Africans and how African colonial subjects developed alternative interpretations and possibilities for the future, as nationalist movements demonstrate. This course will conclude by focusing on independence movements and the challenges faced by post-colonial African nation-states. Case Studies include the Democratic Republic of Congo (Congo-Zaïre), Kenya, Nigeria, Sierra Leone, Senegal, South Africa and Tanzania.

444M. History of Chile
(3-0-3) Jaksic
Chile is generally considered as an exceptionally stable and even prosperous country when compared with many of its neighbors in the region. This course will explore the politics, culture, and economy of Chile since independence in order to assess whether the country is unique, or has shared many of the difficulties and challenges of other Latin American nations. The readings, lectures, and discussions will cover such topics as Chilean independence, wars and revolutions in the 19th century, as well as labor unrest, political mobilization, and state-led economic development. The course will also cover the Pinochet dictatorship and human rights, and the return to democracy in the 1990s. In addition to textbooks, students will use other sources, such as novels and films to explore different facets of Chilean history.

445. Modern China
(3-0-3) Murray
This course begins with a brief examination of certain key themes in Chinese history from the late Ming dynasty to the 18th century and devotes the major portion of the semester to a study of internal and external pressures for changes that led “traditional” China onto a path of “modernization.” Special emphasis is placed on China’s relations with the three nations—Japan, the United States and Russia—that helped chart its course toward revolution and communism. Topics to be examined include the collapse of the Manchu dynasty, the establishment of the first republic, the shift of power from the nationalists to the communists in the Civil War, the creation of the People’s Republic of China, and some contemporary issues.

448. War/Money/Romance: 1100-1200
(3-0-3) Bidick
During the 12th century, the royal court of England made revolutionary advances in killing, counting, and judging at the same time that they patronized the emergence of Arthurian romance. History textbooks usually compartmentalize the history of war, accounting, the law, and romance. This course, instead, asks what they may have in common, specifically how they were engendered on the bodies of imaginary dead maidens, cannibalized Muslims, and tortured Jews.

We will study breakthroughs in royal accounting procedures as a powerful formal rhetoric with links to law and war. As a formal rhetoric capable of abstracting space, accounting transformed the social space of the body, household, and court and also inaugurated new notions of social time.

We also will consider how the same court patronized new forms of Arthurian romance. We will ask how romance renders violence and forgets the violence perpetrated by Christians elsewhere, especially on the Crusades (First Crusade, 1096-1102; Second Crusade, 1147-1149; Third Crusade, 1189-1192; Fourth Crusade, 1202-1204). Finally, we will question how accounting and violence intersect with the treatment of Jewish communities residing in England during the 12th century.
451. Colonial America (3-0-3) Dowd
What is America and how did it happen? These are questions that run through this course. The historical setting is eastern North America from the first Spanish contracts to the beginnings of the imperial crises that led to the American Revolution. Themes of the course include the expansion of Europe overseas; the establishment of various English colonies; the complex relations among Indians, Europeans, and Africans; the rise of Puritanism and evangelical religion; the development of highly differentiated colonial societies; the problem of colonial unity; and the horror, meaning, and striking results of colonial warfare.

452. Revolutionary America (3-0-3) Dowd, Slaghfeu
This course examines the American Revolution as both a process of change and an event with profound consequences for the history of the American people. It emphasizes conditions and consequences of the Revolution for common people and for those living at the fringes of economic subsistence and political power—laborers, women, slaves, and Indians—in addition to the ambitions of the founding fathers. The long-term preconditions for revolution are considered within the contexts of domestic and international politics. We will focus on the conflict that was the heart of the Revolutionary experience and that was the fundamental legacy of the war for American society.

453. The New Nation, 1781-1841 (3-0-3) Waldstreicher
This course examines the social, political, and cultural history of the United States from the ratification of the Constitution to the beginnings of the political crisis over expansion and slavery. It covers the democratization of politics and the problems of national independence in the wake of the Revolution; territorial expansion; economic change; the development of regional, class, religious, racial, ethnic, and gendered subcultures; slavery and resistance to slavery; and the new political and reform movements that respond to the era’s deep and lasting changes.

453M. Pre-Modern Japan (3-0-3) Thomas
This course examines the development of Japanese culture from earliest times to the early 19th century in the context of the major political and social forces that molded the country’s history. Major periods and cultural epochs to be examined include a courtier culture during the Heian period (794-1185), a samurai culture developing in the 12th century, a Zen culture during a medieval age, the Christian century, a bourgeois culture and an urban popular culture during the Tokugawa period (1603-1868). Japan’s relations with other Asian and European nations is also examined to understand Japan’s receptivity to cultural influences from abroad and its effort to synthesize them with native taste.

454. Era of the Civil War, 1848-1877 (3-0-3) Pratt, Waldstreicher, Graff
In the mid-19th century the American political system collapsed. Divergent visions of the American ideal plunged north and south into the bloodiest war in the Republic’s history. This lecture course examines the roots of the nation’s sectional division, the disintegration of mechanisms for political compromise, the structures and policies of the wartime Confederate and Union governments, the strategic conduct of the armed conflict, the societies at war and the Union’s first hesitant steps toward reconstruction and recovery.

455M. Concepts of Nature and the Environment in Japan and Europe (3-0-3) Thomas
The purpose of this course is to explore Japanese concepts of nature in comparison with those of the West and then to ask how these concepts effect modern Japan’s understanding of environmental protection. In other words, this course combines intellectual history and environmental history in Japan and Europe. We discuss the relationship among nature, divinity, and human beings in the Bible and Shinto and Confucian texts. We read radical agrarianist Ando Shoki and see how his vision of the natural state compares with that of his French counterpart, Rousseau. We consider how nature shapes political history in Hegel and Maruyama. Finally, we try to figure out what the claim that the Japanese love nature means both in terms of aesthetics and nationalism and in terms of environmental protection.

456. The United States, 1900-1945 (3-0-3) Blantz
The purpose of this course is to study the political, diplomatic, economic, social and cultural development of the United States from 1900 to 1945. The principle topics to be investigated will be the Progressive Period legislation of Presidents Theodore Roosevelt, William Taft, and Woodrow Wilson, the causes and effects of World War I, the cultural developments of the 1920s, the causes of the Wall Street Crash and Great Depression, the New Deal legislation of President Franklin Roosevelt, the diplomacy of the interwar period, and the home from during World War II.

457. United States Since World War II (3-0-3) Blantz
The purpose of this course is to study the political, diplomatic, economic, social and cultural development of the United States from 1945 through the presidency of Ronald Reagan. Although the military and diplomatic history of World War II will be considered by way of background, the principal topics of investigation will be the Fair Deal Program of President Truman, the Cold War, the Korean Conflict, the Eisenhower Presidency, the New Frontier, Vietnam, President Johnson’s Great Society, the Civil Rights Movement, the Nixon Years, the social and intellectual climate of this postwar era, and the presidencies of Jimmy Carter and Ronald Reagan.

458. U.S. Presidents: FDR to Clinton (3-0-3) DeSantis
A study of the personalities, style, policies and performances of American presidents from Franklin D. Roosevelt to Bill Clinton as they developed the modern American presidency and made it the most important elective office in the world.

461. Survey of Latin American History (3-0-3) Beatry, Jaksic
This course surveys the history of Latin America from A.D. 900 to 1810. In particular, it looks at the impact of the conquest on Amerindian groups and the formation of a distinctive colonial society and economy. Topics will include the nature of pre-Columbian populations, European expansion, the conquest of the Aztec and Inca Empires, the Columbian Exchange, the formation of export economics, the beginnings of the African slave trade and slavery, the introduction of Christianity to the hemisphere, and the consolidation of colonial society.

462M. Latin American History II (3-0-3) Beatry, Jaksic
The goal of this course is to enable students to understand contemporary Latin America — its structures, problems and alternatives — by placing them within a historical perspective. Economic growth, integration into the world market, social change, authoritarian rule, reform and revolution are some of the themes that will be treated. Examples will be drawn from the histories of Mexico, Cuba, Brazil, Bolivia, Chile, Argentina and Central America.

464. Society and Culture in the High Middle Ages (3-0-3) Van Engen
This course will introduce students to major topics in current historical debates about the European middle ages, focusing upon the 12th and 13th centuries. The readings will juxtapose primary sources with current interpretations. The major topics to be covered include the founding of universities and the thought of schoolmen, the forming of court culture and vernacular lyric, new religious groups and a literature of devotion and mysticism, animal tales as allegories for society, and history-writing as a form of social critique.

468. American Indian History (3-0-3) Dowd
This course examines the complicated history of American Indian relations with the British North American colonies and the United States. Beginning with a brief survey of American Indian cultures, we will focus on relations along the moving frontier between the two peoples. Topics include mutual adaptation and exchange, invasion and resistance, environment and economics, racism and ethnic identity. Covering almost half a millennium, the course will give roughly equal time to the four centuries that followed the first serious attempt at British colonization (1585). Almost two-thirds of the course will therefore deal with peoples east of the Mississippi River in the years before 1838.
470. History of American Women II
(3-0-3) Bederman
This course surveys women's relationship to the social, cultural and political developments shaping American society from 1890 to the present, concentrating on developments in women's activism and in popular culture. Topics include the new woman and Progressivism, the transformation of feminism in the 1920s, women's paid and unpaid labor, the "feminine mystique," the Women's Liberation Movement of the 1960s, and changing gender roles in recent decades. Particular attention will be paid to the importance of class, race and ethnicity in shaping women's historical experience.

471. U.S. and the Vietnam War
(3-0-3) Miscamble, Brady
This course examines the participation of the United States in its "longest war": the conflict in Vietnam. The course is taught primarily from an "American" as opposed to a "Vietnamese" perspective.

472. U.S. Foreign Policy Before 1945
(3-0-3) Miscamble, Brady
This course covers the main developments in American foreign policy from the Spanish American War in 1898 through World War II. It traces the emergence of the United States as a major world power and examines in some detail how the United States became involved in two world wars.

473. U.S. Foreign Policy Since 1945
(3-0-3) Miscamble, Brady
This course covers the main developments in American foreign policy from World War II through the Bush presidency. The principal topics of investigation will be wartime diplomacy and the origins of the Cold War; the Cold War and containment in Europe and Asia; Eisenhower/Dulles diplomacy; Kennedy-Johnson and Vietnam; Nixon-Kissinger and détente; Carter and the diplomacy of Human Rights; Reagan and the revival of containment; Bush and the end of the Cold War.

474. American Peace Movement Since World War II
(3-0-3) DeSantis
This course examines the origins of the modern American peace movement. It explores the shifting patterns of support for the peace movement, the curious ways Americans have searched and worked for peace, and some of the important peace groups and leaders.

477. Pre-Modern China
(3-0-3) Murray
The course will provide a general survey of Chinese history from the Shang Dynasty (1766-1027 B.C.) to A.D. 1600. Besides highlighting the major developments of each dynasty, the course will devote special attention to the Confucian and Legalist underpinnings of the Chinese empire, the influence of Buddhism on Chinese society, the emergence of gentry culture and the civil service examination system, and the phenomenon of "barbarian" conquest and cultural interaction.

478M. History of Chinese Medicine
(3-0-3) Murray
In light of the contemporary currency of certain Chinese practices in the field of alternative medicine, this course will explore the phenomenon of Chinese traditional medicine in both its historical and contemporary settings. The first unit, Medicine in Ancient China, will explore the earliest medical ideas of the Chinese and will demonstrate how the state's political unification gave rise to a correlating cosmology that not only included Heaven and Earth, but also human beings as integral elements of an organic cosmos. The second unit will explore the influences and contributions of Taoism (Daoism) and Buddhism to Chinese medicine and will explore what it meant to be both physicians and patients in late imperial China. The third unit will focus on medicine in contemporary China and will feature the experiences of Elizabeth Hsu, a student of Chinese medical anthropology who as a part of her doctoral research enrolled as a student in Yunnan Traditional Chinese Medical College between September 1988 and December 1989. We will conclude the course with a brief examination of the influence of Chinese medicine on the contemporary world.

479. American Religious History
(3-0-3) Appleby, Cummings
This course will review the interaction between religion and America from at least four sets of perspectives: the perspectives of Native Americans, New England Puritans and their descendants, Catholic and Jewish immigrants, and 20th-century social reformers.
These topics form the basis for exploring the following themes: How does technology change? How did we get where we are — do we have the technology now that we must have, should have, or need to have? What guides technical creativity? How have social effects of technologies been assessed and dealt with? How have technologies fundamentally changed ordinary life and societal organization?

491, 492, 493. Seminar Series in History
All history majors must take one seminar, though the faculty encourages majors to take at least two. Juniors, in particular, should consider enrolling in a seminar during the spring semester. Each seminar treats a special theme by reading, discussion, and writing of a paper based on original research. Enrollment in each seminar is limited to 18.

491A. America in the 20th Century
(3-0-3) Blantz
The purpose of this course is twofold. First, it permits the student to gain a greater familiarity with several of the major topics in 20th-century American history — the Progressive Period of Theodore Roosevelt and Woodrow Wilson; the Wall Street Crash of 1929 and Great Depression that followed; the New Deal legislation of Franklin Roosevelt; the origins of World War I and World War II; the Cold War; the domestic legislation of Presidents Harry Truman, Dwight Eisenhower, John Kennedy, and Lyndon Johnson; the Civil Rights Movement and the Feminist Movement; Richard Nixon and Watergate; aspects of 20th-century American culture; and the presidency of Ronald Reagan. Second, and more importantly, the course offers each student the opportunity to research and produce a major paper on a topic of one’s own choosing in 20th-century American history.

491F. Notre Dame History
(3-0-3) Turner
Using Notre Dame as a case study, this course will explore the social, intellectual, religious, and institutional history of American higher education. The major work of the course will be a 25- to 30-page paper based on primary research in the Notre Dame archives.

491G. Americans in Paris and Vice Versa
(3-0-3) Kielman
Americans love to go to Paris and love to return with stories about how difficult the Parisians were. This typical tourist experience suggests a long-standing love-hate relationship between France and the United States that will be the subject matter of this seminar. Ranging from diplomatic to cultural history, we will begin with some general readings about the history of French-American relations. Students will then focus on particular topics based on their interests and produce a seminar paper of about 25 pages based on research in primary sources.

491H. Ireland in the Age of Revolution
(3-0-3) Smyth
This seminar focuses on the crisis of Irish politics and society in the final quarter of the 18th century. It consists of close readings and discussion of secondary and contemporary literature, mapping the road from reformism, through radicalism to revolution.

491J. Latin American Independence Movements
(3-0-3) Jakic
This seminar will focus on the breakdown of the Spanish empire in Latin America and the emergence of new nation-states in the region in the first quarter of the 19th century. Contrary to common expectations, the former colonies did not form a united nation but rather split into 10 different republics that developed their own unique histories, only to split further apart during the course of the century. This seminar will examine the origins and actors of the independence movements, the development of an ideology of emancipation, and the variegated causes of fragmentation.

491M. The United States and the Cold War
(3-0-3) Miscamble, Brady
This course will examine the various issues surrounding the United States and the Cold War, from its inception to the tearing down of the Berlin Wall.

491N. Jerusalem
(3-0-3) Cobb
This research seminar provides an in-depth examination of the city of Jerusalem and its diverse historical experiences from the rise of Islam to the present (c. 600-2000). This course is primarily student-driven: students will lead portions of discussions, present their research, and constructively critique the work of their peers.

491P. Europe in the Two World Wars
(3-0-3) Bergen
Students in this seminar will devote much of their time to producing a major research paper on some aspect of European history in the age of the world wars. Substantial work with primary sources is required. As a group we will also read and discuss some important studies by scholars of World Wars I and II.

491Q. North American Indians to 1890
(3-0-3) Dowd
In this seminar, we will discuss both histories and documents of Native American relations with the British colonies and the United States. We will begin with the first English efforts at settlement and end with the 1890s, the "low point" of American Indian history. Topics include: trade and warfare; accommodation and resistance; missions and religious revitalization; environment and economics; racism and ethnic identity. The emphasis in this course is on research and writing. In the first half of the course, students and the professor will read and discuss a small portion of the vast literature on American Indian history. In the second part of the course, students will conduct their research and produce their papers. The object, as in all history seminars, is a 25-page paper, based largely on "primary" sources. There are abundant sources in the library for such work.

491X. Sem: Nationalism in Europe
(3-0-3) Crago
This course will begin with several joint sessions devoted to an examination of the role nationalism has played in shaping modern European history. Given the broad nature of the course, emphasis will be placed on the theoretical underpinnings of nationalism and on how national mythology influences historiography. The second portion of the course offers students an opportunity to conduct research on topics approved by the instructor.

491Y. Heretics and Friars, Mystics and Nuns
(3-0-3) VanEngen
From about 1100 until about 1400, European society witnessed wave after wave of new religious movements. These energies yielded groups and teachers of all stripes, men and women regarded as heretics and as saints. This course will treat the most important of these, from the Cistercian monks who rejected the established ways of their fellow Benedictines around 1100, to Francis of Assisi’s lay penitents and preachers, to suspect beguines in the Lowlands and the Rhineland mystics. The emphasis will fall upon studying texts from these religious teachers and actors that will help us get at the aspirations of these new religious, while setting them into their social and cultural environments.

492C. U.S. Catholic History
(3-0-3) Cummings
This seminar is designed with two goals in mind: to introduce students to the major events and themes in the history of American Catholicism, and to help students organize, research, and write an original work of historical scholarship. During the first half of the semester, we will read and discuss a variety of primary and secondary sources concerning the following topics: immigrant and ethnic Catholicism; the experience of Catholic women, especially women religious; Catholic devotional life; Catholic social movements; and the relationship between Catholics and the broader American society. We will explore some of the major historical interpretations of the Catholic experience, and become familiar with methods of historical research. During the second half of the semester, students will work independently (in consultation with the instructor) to prepare their research papers. At the end of the semester, they will share their findings with other participants in the seminar through an oral presentation.
492D. Occupation of Japan
(3-0-3) Thomas
Today President Bush argues that American should not be involved in “nation building” in Afghanistan, but in 1945 the United States was determined to rebuild Japan along peaceful and democratic lines. As American troops poured into the bombed-out and defeated country, nation building was their goal. Was it reasonable and just for Occupation officials to hope to alter the fundamental political, economic, and cultural framework of their former enemy? How did they attempt this monumental task? To what extent were they successful? And how did the Japanese respond? From movie theaters to agricultural regulations, from elementary schools to national defense, no aspect of Japanese life remained untouched, but were they truly remodeled?

492E. Europe in the Nazi Era
(3-0-3) Bergen
This research seminar will address issues related to the rise, expansion, and defeat of Nazism between 1933 and 1945. Although Germany occupies a central place in this history, we will focus on the Europe-wide impacts of Nazi ideas and aggression. Students will read and discuss key works in the field dealing with topics such as Hitler’s rise to power, European diplomacy in the 1930s; the course of World War II; Nazi occupation practices; the Holocaust and other programs of mass killing; women and the war effort; popular consensus, collaboration, and resistance; and the immediate post-war period. At the same time, each student will write a major research paper, based on primary sources, that explores in depth some aspect of this crucial period of European history.

492G. Era of Richard III
(3-0-3) Staff
This course considers the historical evidence regarding the English King Richard III (r. 1483-1485). Richard’s reputation suffered greatly following his defeat at the Battle of Bosworth Field in 1485. He was immediately cast as the villain following his defeat at the Battle of Bosworth Field. This course, offered for the first time in fall 1999, provides select, invited juniors an opportunity to gain a general introduction to research methodologies used by historians. It is specifically designed for students who have yet to take the research seminar but nonetheless have defined a future professional interest in research and writing. The emphasis in the seminar will be on learning how to conduct primary research, to master the mechanics of scholarly writing, and to transform research into a well-argued piece of historiography. The seminar will focus on the ability to think creatively and to translate both thoughts and inquiries into a clear, concise, well-researched piece of scholarship.

494. Introduction to Historical Methods
(3-0-3) Bederman, Crago
This seminar, offered for the first time in fall 1999, provides select, invited juniors an opportunity to gain a general introduction to research methodologies used by historians. It is specifically designed for students who have yet to take the research seminar but nonetheless have defined a future professional interest in research and writing. The emphasis in the seminar will be on learning how to conduct primary research, to master the mechanics of scholarly writing, and to transform research into a well-argued piece of historiography. The seminar will focus on the ability to think creatively and to translate both thoughts and inquiries into a clear, concise, well-researched piece of scholarship.

494H. Honors Methodology
Staff
History Honors Program students only. In the spring of the junior year, the History Honors student will enroll in this Reading and Discussion colloquium. The course is intended to introduce the student to basic issues of critical interpretation and historiography through a specific field. This course will rotate between various divisions within the department. (Those studying abroad will take this course in the spring of the senior year.)

495H. Honors Colloquium
Staff
History Honors Program students only. In the fall of the senior year, the History Honors student will enroll in this course, where he or she will complete a research paper of up to 25 pages. Like the Reading and Discussion colloquium, this seminar will rotate among the department’s various divisions. To encourage breadth of knowledge, the Methodology seminar and the Reading and Discussion colloquium will be offered in two different fields in successive semesters.

498. Special Studies
(0-1-3) Staff
Prerequisite: Written consent of instructor. Independent study, writing and research under the direction of a faculty member.

499H. Honors Thesis
Staff
History Honors Program students only. In the spring of the senior year, the History Honors student will work on a thesis (up to 50 pages) under the supervision of a specific faculty member. This directed writing course will satisfy the seminar requirement (HIST 491, 492, or 493) of the major and will be written within the student’s field of concentration.
Program of Studies. Students in the College of Arts and Letters may pursue a major in mathematics with a concentration in honors. (Note that this program should not be confused with the Arts and Letters/Science Honors program and that several concentrations, including Honors, are available with a major in mathematics in the College of Science.) The mathematics major in arts and letters aims to give the student a thorough liberal intellectual discipline and to furnish an adequate background for other fields of study. At the same time it prepares the student for graduate work in mathematics, and many of those who have taken the program have entered graduate schools in that field. Others have entered philosophy, medicine, law, economics and industrial management.

Students intending to follow this major in the College of Arts and Letters must declare their intention to the advisor indicated by the mathematics department and the dean of arts and letters at advance registration in the spring of their freshman year. Students must have completed or be completing satisfactory work in MATH 165 and 166. The program of their studies is subject in its entirety to approval by the advisor.

Students whose first major is in the College of Arts and Letters may also pursue a second major in mathematics. See “Mathematics As a Second Major” on page 286 of this Bulletin for information about this option.

The Medieval Institute Undergraduate Programs.

The liberal arts were first cultivated as a university curriculum during the Middle Ages; thus, the undergraduate programs in Medieval Institute offer an ideal context in which to pursue them in the modern world. Medieval Studies foster close reading, precise textual analysis, careful writing, and vigorous discussion. Medieval Studies therefore provide not only a solid foundation for graduate study, but also—and even more significantly—a superb liberal arts education relevant to a wide variety of personal and professional goals. The objective of undergraduate programs in the Medieval Institute is to introduce students to medieval culture and to the disciplinary and interdisciplinary skills necessary for the serious pursuit of the liberal arts in general and medieval studies in particular.

Undergraduate studies in the Medieval Institute may follow one of four tracks:

1. Major in Medieval Studies
2. The Supplementary Major
3. The Major in Medieval Studies with Specialist Option
4. The Minor in Medieval Studies

All four of these programs enable students to take a wide variety of courses focused on the intellectual, cultural, and religious heritage of Europe. Students have access to the resources of the collection and staff of the library that forms the core of the Medieval Institute, located on the seventh floor of the Hesburgh Library; they also are encouraged to participate in the intellectual life of the Medieval Institute, particularly to attend the institute’s lecture series and to engage guest scholars, faculty members, and graduate students, as well as undergraduate colleagues. Undergraduates in the institute compete for the Michel Prize, awarded to an outstanding paper written by an undergraduate on a medieval topic, and participate in the unique graduation ceremony sponsored by the institute.

1. The Major in Medieval Studies.

Students wishing to major in Medieval Studies build their program of studies from courses offered by the 10 departments that participate in the interdisciplinary program of the Medieval Institute: (1) Anthropology; (2) Art, Art History, and Design (art history); (3) Classics (Latin); (4) English (Old and Middle English); (5) German and Russian (Old and Middle High German); (6) History; (7) Music (musicology); (8) Philosophy; (9) Romance Languages and Literatures (Old and Middle French, Old Provençal, Spanish and Italian); and (10) Theology. While students are encouraged to explore various directions in all these department, the fundamental requirements for the major in Medieval Studies are as follows.

A. Two semesters of a language appropriate to Medieval Studies. 6 or 0 credits
   Two semesters of a language appropriate to Medieval Studies forms a prerequisite for any major. Normally, Latin will form the language component in the program, but the student is encouraged to study Greek, Hebrew, or Arabic if his or her interest lies in Eastern Europe or in Arabic culture. Syriac may be taken if the student has a strong interest in Eastern liturgies and patristic studies. If the student counts two semesters of Latin, for example, as the college requirement, the prerequisite is fulfilled, but the credit does not apply to the major; if, on the other hand, the student uses another language to meet the college requirement, two semesters of Latin may be added to the major. Courses in an appropriate language above 300 may be counted below in G.

B. Both courses from the Medieval History sequence (307 and 308) 6 credits
C. An interdisciplinary course 3 credits

Normally, this course should be one offered within the Medieval Institute.

D. One course in Medieval Art History, Music History, or Vernacular Literature 3 credits
E. One course in Medieval Philosophy or Theology 3 credits
F. One advanced seminar (400 level or above) in Medieval Studies 3 credits

This course will be selected carefully in consultation with the undergraduate advisor. The course normally will be taken in an area in which the student has a strong background and, in certain cases, even may be a graduate-level seminar.

G. Four (or two) further courses in Medieval Studies chosen from any of the participating disciplines. 6 or 12 credits

These courses should be chosen in consultation with the undergraduate advisor, so that they both strengthen the student’s principal interests and broaden the student’s background and disciplinary skills. Upper-level courses in an additional foreign language may fulfill this requirement. (Cf. requirement A: If Latin is counted as credit in the major, two further courses meet this requirement.)

Total credits for major: 36

2. The Supplementary Major.

Many students pursuing a major in one of the departments that participate and contribute to the broad mission of the Medieval Institute may wish to supplement and strengthen their primary major with a second major in Medieval Studies. The following program is available to students as a supplementary major.

A. Two semesters of a language appropriate to Medieval Studies 6 or 0 credits

See qualifications stated above under major.

B. Both courses from the Medieval History sequence (307 and 308) 6 credits
C. An interdisciplinary course 3 credits

Normally, this course should be one offered within the Medieval Institute.

D. One course in Medieval Art History, Music History, or Vernacular Literature 3 credits
E. One course in Medieval Philosophy or Theology 3 credits
F. One advanced seminar (400 level or above) in Medieval Studies 3 credits

This course will be selected carefully in consultation with the undergraduate advisor. The course normally will be taken in an area in which the student has a strong background and, in certain cases, even may be a graduate-level seminar.

G. Two further courses in Medieval Studies chosen from any of the participating disciplines 0 or 6 credits

These courses should be chosen in consultation with the undergraduate advisor, so that they both strengthen the primary field of interest and broaden the student’s background and disciplinary skills. Upper-level courses in an additional foreign language may fulfill this requirement.

Total credits for supplementary major: 30

3. The Medieval Studies Major—Specialist Option (in Either History, English, or Comparative Literature)

Students with an interest in medieval culture and a clear disciplinary focus in Comparative Literature, English, or History may pursue the Medieval Studies Major with specialist option. The goal of this program is to prepare students for advanced studies by providing them with (1) a broad overview of the major events and developments of the Middle Ages, (2) a grounding in the topics and approaches to medieval studies in one particular discipline, (3) an introduction the study of medieval culture in two or three other disciplines, and (4) certain basic skills (linguistic, methodological and theoretical) necessary for the serious pursuit of medieval studies on the graduate level. Twelve courses are required in this curriculum, distributed as follows.

A. Two semesters of a language appropriate to Medieval Studies 6 credits

Normally, Latin (any level) will form the language component in the program, especially if the student is specializing in English or Comparative Literature. The student may study Greek or Arabic if his or her interest lies in Eastern Europe or in Arabic culture.

B. Both courses from the Medieval History sequence (307 and 308) 6 credits

C. An interdisciplinary course 3 credits

Normally, this course should be one offered within the Medieval Institute.

D. One course in Medieval Art History, Music History, or Vernacular Literature 3 credits

Vernacular Literature is highly recommended for students whose specialist discipline is English or Comparative Literature.

E. One advanced seminar (400 level or above) in Medieval Studies 3 credits

This course will be selected carefully in consultation with the undergraduate advisor and the advisor in the student’s primary field. The course normally will be taken in an area in which the student has a strong background and, in certain cases, even may be a graduate-level seminar.

F. One seminar in the history, methodology, or theory of the history or literature 3 credits

P. Requirements determined by specialist: 3 or 6 credits

1. History: two semesters of medieval survey in one discipline or two disciplines. (6)
2. For English, one medieval English survey. (3)
3. Comparative Literature: one medieval literature survey. (3)

Q. Two or three additional courses in the specialist discipline (if only one seminar was taken under F) 9 or 6 credits

Total credits for major with specialist option: 36

4. The Medieval Studies Minor.
The Minor in Medieval Studies allows students who are also committed to other programs of study to pursue their interests in medieval culture by combining a focused group of courses treating the Middle Ages with a Major and/or a Supplementary Major in other departments.

Requirements:
Five courses treating aspects of the Middle Ages distributed among three disciplines. Students are encouraged to use at least one course offered in the Medieval Institute itself as one of the “disciplines.”

While the minor has no specific language requirement, the student is encouraged to use courses in a language to complete the minor. Minors are taken seriously in the Medieval Institute and participate fully in the graduation ceremony sponsored by the institute. For further details, see the listing under Minors.

Most courses in the major and minor programs are drawn from participating departments, and full course descriptions should be sought in the relevant sections of the Bulletin. For additional information on specific programs in the institute and availability and sequence of courses, see the director of undergraduate studies.

Course Descriptions. The following list of courses gives the number and title of each course. Lecture hours per week, studio hours per week, and credits each semester are in parentheses. The instructor’s name is also included.

180. University Seminar
Because medieval studies is an interdisciplinary program, this seminar, depending on the expertise of the instructor, will introduce students to the paradigms of medieval philosophy, history or literature and in doing so will satisfy the respective University requirement. In addition, each course contains a significant writing component with a minimum of 24 pages required of each student.

Program of Studies. The Department of Music offers students a variety of musical experiences in accordance with its two objectives: (1) to provide all students, regardless of their major, knowledge and training in music through introductory, historical and theoretical courses, through participation in large and small ensembles and through applied instrumental or vocal study; and (2) to provide intensive curriculum and training for the student who chooses music as a major.

Four areas of specialization are offered for advanced training in music and are recommended for those students wishing to pursue graduate study in the field. These are the specializations in music history, music theory, and sacred music, each of which requires 54 hours, and the specialization in performance, which requires 69 hours.

The requirements for a 69-credit performance major are:

Students considering these programs should contact the department as early as possible, preferably in the freshman year. Given the number of credits required for these specializations, it is difficult to complete the curriculum if the student does not begin intensive musical studies in the freshman year.

In addition to its programs leading to degrees appropriate for further professional study in the field, the Department of Music offers a 36-credit program in music, usually taken as a supplemental major. This program allows for the study of the basic foundations of music while pursuing a major in another field.

The requirements for a 36-credit performance major are:

All of the major degree programs have requirements beyond the course work. These can include recitals, juries, piano proficiency and so forth. Students should contact the department for details.

All students who wish to participate in large or small ensembles must qualify through audition. Students who elect courses in music may do so with permission of the student’s dean or faculty advisor. Applied music lessons are available to all students, with or without credit. A fee of $150 is required of students for the 14 half-hour lessons per semester. (Fees are charged to the students’ accounts, and no partial refunds are made after the third full week of class.)

Course Descriptions. The following course descriptions give the number and title of each course. Lecture hours per week, laboratory and/or tutorial hours per week and credits each semester are in parentheses. The instructor’s name is also included.

Music Organizations

100. Band (Marching-Varsity)

(V-0-1) Dye, Dwyer

Performs for athletic events and special functions. Admission by audition.

101. Orchestra

(V-0-1) Stowe

Performs music from the 18th to the 20th century in several concerts a year. Admission by audition.

102. Chamber Orchestra

(V-0-1) Blachly

An ensemble of 10-15 players drawn primarily from the ranks of the Notre Dame Orchestra. Admission by audition.

COURSES

120/220. Introduction to Classical Music
(3-0-3) Stowe
Historical survey of Western art music from the Middle Ages to the present, with emphasis on the study of selected significant vocal and instrumental works.

121/221. Introduction to Jazz
(3-0-3) Dwyer
A music appreciation course requiring no musical background and no prerequisites. General coverage of the history, various styles and major performers of jazz, with an emphasis on current practice.

123/223. Music of the Catholic Rite
(3-0-3) Frandsen
A study of the music composed for the Mass, the Office hours (primarily Vespers), and the Requiem Mass from the Middle Ages to the present day. The musical repertoire of each era is examined both from a purely musical standpoint and in light of the reactions of various popes, from John XXIII through Pius X, to the sacred music of their day. Documents on sacred music issued after Vatican II also are examined in relation to postconciliar church music for both the choir and the congregation.
125/225. Current Jazz
(3-0-3) Dwyer
A study of the jazz performers and practices of today and of the preceding decade—the roots, stylistic developments and directions of individual artists, small combos and big bands.

126/226. American Music
(3-0-3) Staff
An appreciation-level course that will concentrate upon the major stylistic and historical developments of American music since the colonial period.

127/227. Gender, Race, Class, and Sexuality in Western Musical Culture
(3-0-3) Higgins
This course adopts a cultural studies approach, focused on issues of gender, race, class, and sexuality, to the study of a wide selection of both classical and popular musics, ranging chronologically from pastourelles from the Middle Ages to the music videos of Madonna, with special attention to two operas: Mozart’s Don Giovanni and Bizet’s Carmen. Students will learn how to listen to and recognize common musical practices composers and musicians use—specific uses of melody, rhythm, meter, tempo, harmonic scales and chord progressions, dynamics, and instrumentation—and to explore critical modes of interpreting them within specific ideological frameworks.

180. Fine Arts University Seminar
The nature and principles of music in cultural context. Recent topics have included Mozart, Beethoven, and Schubert; Gender and Sexuality in Opera; Impressionism in Music; Music of J.S. Bach.

228. 20th-Century Music
(3-0-3) Johnson
An introduction to the history and ideas of Western classical music from 1900 to 1998.

229. Music of the 18th Century
(3-0-3) Frandsen
Introduction to the major composers and musical genres of the 18th century. Composers studied include Vivaldi, Bach, Handel, C.P.E. Bach, Gluck, Mozart, and Haydn; musical genres studied include the cantata, concerto, sonata, fantasy, quartet, opera, and oratorio. Readings include reactions and criticisms of 18th-century listeners, and writings of modern music scholars.

230. Theory for Non-Majors
(3-0-3) Haimo, Smith
A one-semester survey of the structure of tonal music. Topics covered include chord formation, voice leading, harmonic progression, cadences, dissonance treatment and form.

231-232. Music Theory I and II
(3-0-3) Haimo, Johnson, Smith
Prerequisite: Musical background. A systematic approach to the understanding and manipulation of the basic materials of music. Required of and intended for music majors and minors, but open to students with sufficient musical background.

233-234. Musicianship I and II
(2-0-1) Stowe
Exercise and mastery of basic skills in music: melodic, harmonic, rhythmic and keyboard. To be taken along with Theory I and II. Required of all students intending to major in music.

241-242-243. Music History I, II and III
(3-0-3) Blachly, Bower, Frandsen, Higgins, Youens
A survey of music. The study of the major forms and styles in Western history. Required of music majors and minors, but open to students with sufficient musical background.

251. Music Theory III
(3-0-3) Haimo, Johnson, Smith
Prerequisite: Music Theory I and II. Studies in advanced harmony.

253-254. Musicianship III and IV
(2-0-1) Stowe
Exercise and mastery of more advanced skills in music: melodic, harmonic, rhythmic, and score-reading. To be taken along with Theory III and IV. Required of all students majoring in music.

335. Music Theory V
(3-0-3) Haimo, Johnson, Smith
Prerequisite: Theory I-IV. A study of the procedures for harmonic, melodic, rhythmic and formal analysis.

486. Vocal Pedagogy
(1-0-1) Resick
Creative writing in various forms, conventional and contemporary. Private instruction only.

495. Senior Recital
(V-0-1) Staff

498. Special Studies
(V-0-V) Staff
Prerequisite: Approval of the chair. An individualized course in directed studies under personal supervision of the teacher.

499. Undergraduate Thesis Direction
(V-0-V) Staff

Program of Studies. There are two ways to major in philosophy: Regular philosophy majors are required to take eight courses in philosophy beyond the general two-course University requirement. Three specific courses must be included among the eight: a two-semester sequence of courses in the history of philosophy, Ancient and Medieval Philosophy (PHIL 301) and Modern Philosophy (PHIL 302), and a course in formal logic (PHIL 313 or, for qualified students, PHIL 513. The logic requirement can also be fulfilled by MATH 210, though this course does not count toward the eight courses required for the major). In addition, regular majors must take at least two courses at the 400-level on some topic in contemporary philosophy and three upper-division electives. Students in the Arts and Letters Preprofessional Program or the Arts and Letters Engineering Program who take the regular major in philosophy are required to take seven rather than eight philosophy courses beyond the two-course University requirement but otherwise must fulfill all other requirements for the major.

Honors philosophy majors are required to take 10 courses in philosophy beyond the general two-course University requirement. In addition to the courses taken to satisfy the regular major requirements, honors majors must take one additional 400-level seminar in a contemporary area of philosophy and write a senior thesis (PHIL 499) in the fall semester of the senior year. The senior thesis will count as a regular three-hour course and should be planned with the director of undergraduate studies during the semester prior to its writing. The honors major is intended primarily for students planning postgraduate study, and a minimum grade point average of 3.5 is expected, though exceptions are possible. Students in the Arts and Letters Preprofessional Program or the Arts and Letters Engineering Program who take the honors major in philosophy are required to take nine rather than 10 philosophy courses beyond the two-course University requirement but otherwise must fulfill all other requirements for the major.

Students majoring in other departments may complete a supplementary major in philosophy by taking six courses beyond the two-course University requirement. These six courses must include the history of philosophy sequence (PHIL 301 and 302) and two additional courses at the 300-level or higher, selected in consultation with one of the philosophy department’s faculty advisors. Students in the Program of Liberal Studies may complete the supplementary major with five rather than six courses beyond the University two-course requirement but otherwise must fulfill all other requirements for the second major. Philosophy also contributes to a number of interdepartmental concentrations in the College of Arts and Letters. Details can be found in the section of the Bulletin on Interdisciplinary Minors Within the College.

Course Descriptions. The following course descriptions give the number and title of each course. Lecture hours per week, laboratory and/or tutorial hours per week and credits each semester are in parentheses. The instructor’s name is also included.

101. Introduction to Philosophy (3-0-3) Staff

A general introduction to philosophy, with emphasis on perennial problems such as the existence of God, human freedom and moral obligation. The course is also intended to sharpen the student’s skills of critical thinking. Satisifes the University requirement for a first course in philosophy. For first-year students only.

180. Philosophy University Seminar (3-0-3) Staff

An introductory approach to philosophy, with emphasis on perennial problems such as the existence of God, human freedom, and moral obligation. The course is also intended to sharpen the student’s skills of critical thinking. Satisifes the University requirement for a first course in philosophy.

195. Honors Philosophy Seminar (3-0-3) Staff

A general introduction to philosophy, with emphasis on perennial problems such as the existence of God, human freedom, and moral obligation. The course is also intended to sharpen the student’s skills of critical thinking. Satisifes the University requirement for a first course in philosophy. For students in the Arts and Letters/Science Honors Program.

201. Introduction to Philosophy (3-0-3) Staff

A general introduction to philosophy, with emphasis on perennial problems such as the existence of God, human freedom, and moral obligation. The course is also intended to sharpen the student’s skills of critical thinking. Satisifes the University requirement for a first course in philosophy.

Images of Humanity

206. Philosophy and Psychiatry (3-0-3) Maxier

A comparative analysis of first-person narratives of life with mental disorder and a comparative evaluation of anthropological, philosophical, and biomedical perspectives on the lived experiences of mental illness.

207. Knowledge and Mind (3-0-3) Stubenberg

An introductory survey of a number of issues in the theory of knowledge and the philosophy of mind.

210. Simone de Beauvoir (3-0-3) Shroder-Frechette

An analysis of the philosophical writings of the greatest feminist theorist of the 20th century, perhaps of all time. The main focus of the course is on The Second Sex, but the readings also include The Ethics of Ambiguity, Old Age, and The Woman Destroyed.
215. Gender, Politics, and Evolution (3-0-3) Manier
An examination of ethical/political models of gender-neutral access to public and domestic requisites for the development of basic human capabilities, and a comparison of these models with current studies of the significance of human sexual dimorphism in evolutionary psychology.

216. Ancient Wisdom and Modern Love (3-0-3) O’Connor
An examination of contemporary issues of love and friendship from the perspective of ancient philosophy. Course materials range from Plato and Aristotle to Shakespeare and contemporary film.

217. Visual Thinking (3-0-3) Shin
A examination of the relation between thought and imagery, one of the most debated topics in philosophy, psychology, and anthropology.

219. A Brief History of Time, Space, and Motion (3-0-3) Jaenuig
An examination of the historical evolution of the philosophical conceptions of time, space, and motion from Plato to Einstein. Special attention will be paid to the influence of developments in physics on this evolution in philosophical theorizing (and vice versa).

221. Philosophy of Human Nature (3-0-3) Weicher, Moss
An examination of some competing views of human nature based on classical readings ranging from Plato to the present day.

222. Images of Humanity: Existentialist Themes (3-0-3) Ameriks, Watson
An examination of fundamental questions about the nature of human beings and their destiny-based on a critical examination of the work of pivotal existentialist thinkers: Kierkegaard, Marcel and Sartre.

224. Memoirs of Madness (3-0-3) Manier
An introduction to biological, psychological and cultural perspectives on mental disorders. The overarching philosophical issue of the course is the problem of personal identity, the construction of the self as a center of responsible human agency. The most important subtopic is the social and cultural construction of gender roles and their relationship to human sexual dimorphism. A large, growing number of excellent “memoirs of madness” facilitate discursive analysis of the subject.

225. Images of Humanity: Scientific Perspectives (3-0-3) Howard, Ramsey
An inquiry into the conception of a person suggested by the results of modern science. Such issues as the mind-body problem, the problem of human freedom and the uniqueness of human rationality will be dealt with in light of research findings in neurophysiology, psychology, linguistics, biology and the physical sciences.

226. Images of Humanity: Aesthetics and the Philosophy of Art (3-0-3) Rush
An introductory course in the application of philosophical methods to questions of aesthetics and art. The first part of the course will concern the history of aesthetics, concentrating on the views of Plato, Aristotle, Horace, Aquinas, Kant and Hegel. The second part of the course will consider contemporary approaches to problems such as the nature of aesthetic properties and categories, what distinguishes art from other things, and the role of critical interpretation in the experience of art.

227. Ways of Knowing (3-0-3) David, Stubenberg
This course examines a number of “ways of knowing”: mathematical, scientific, historical, literary, legal and theological, in order to determine significant differences and similarities. The course will draw upon the experience students have had in different major fields of study. It is thus primarily designed for upper-level students.

228. Philosophy and the Arts (3-0-3) A. Gutting
A consideration of the nature of art and the aesthetic using both philosophical texts and works of art drawn from a wide variety of media (painting, literature, film, architecture, etc.).

229. Death and Dying (3-0-3) Warfield
This course examines metaphysical and ethical issues associated with bodily death. Metaphysical issues taken up in this course include the following: What is death? Is death a bad thing? Is there any hope for survival of death? Ethical issues to be discussed include suicide, euthanasia and abortion.

232. Women: Alternative Philosophical Perspectives (3-0-3) Kourany
An examination of some of the most pressing problems currently confronting women, the more important theories, from the ultraconservative to the radical feminist, that have been proposed to explain these problems and the concrete proposals for change in society suggested by such theories.

234. Self and World (3-0-3) Dumont
A general introduction to the fundamental questions about the nature of the world and our place in it, the area of philosophy called metaphysics.

235. Philosophy and Fantasy (3-0-3) Sayre
A consideration of fantasy literature from a philosophic vantage point as dramatizing human beings’ age-old wonderment regarding the nature of the universe and their place within it.

236. Classics of Political and Constitutional Theory (3-0-3) Flint
An examination of a number of the fundamental texts in political and constitutional theory, with an emphasis on works of special importance to the British and American political systems.

237. Philosophy and Classical Physics (3-0-3) Howard
A survey of the history of natural philosophy and physics from antiquity to the end of the 19th century, but with an emphasis on the philosophical issues that arise in this history, meaning questions of metaphysics, epistemology and scientific methodology.

238. Education of the Spirit (3-0-3) Neiman
What is spirituality? Is there such a thing as spiritual intelligence, or what the ancients called wisdom? If so, can it be taught? Finally, if education of the spirit is possible, is it compatible with education for democratic virtue (with its separation of church and state)? In this course we examine some answers to these questions as suggested by the Christian Monastic tradition, the pragmatism of William James, “12-step groups” and several versions of feminism.

239. Minds, Brains and Persons (3-0-3) Jenkins, Stubenberg
This course will treat some central issues in the philosophy of mind, such as freedom of the will, personal identity and the relationship between mind and body.

241. Ethics (3-0-3) DePaul, Holloway, Warfield
An examination of the relationship between thought and action in light of contemporary and traditional accounts of the nature of ethics.

242. Basic Concepts in Political Philosophy (3-0-3) Bays, Weithman
An introduction to important thinkers and problems of political philosophy. Basic concepts to be considered are equality, liberty and authority.

243. Moral Problems (3-0-3) Sterba, Warfield
An introduction to the field of moral philosophy, with major emphasis on contemporary moral issues.

244. Philosophy of Law (3-0-3) Robinson
An examination of the relationship between law and moral philosophy, punishment and the nature of its rationality, the role that moral theory has to play in the process of constitutional interpretation.
245. Medical Ethics
(3-0-3) Solomon
An exploration from the point of view of ethical theory of a number of ethical problems in contemporary biomedicine. Topics discussed will include euthanasia, abortion, the allocation of scarce medical resources, truth-telling in the doctor-patient relationship, the right to medical care and informed consent and human experimentation.

246. Ethics and Business
(3-0-3) Holloway
This course aims at helping the student recognize the moral aspects of business decisions on the personal level and of business institutions on the social level.

247. Environmental Ethics
(3-0-3) DePaul, Sterba
The course will be an attempt to come to grips critically with the moral significance of contemporary concern for ecology and the environment.

248. Modern Science and Human Values
(3-0-3) Quinn
Applications of ethical theory to moral problems created by science, such as distributing scarce medical resources, experimenting with animals, teaching creationism and dealing with computer violations of privacy.

251. Modern Physics and Moral Responsibility
(3-0-3) Howard
An examination of such questions as: What are the moral responsibilities of the scientist? Should the scientist be held accountable for what might be done with the results of his or her scientific research? Does the scientist have any special role to play, as a citizen, in public debate about science policy? Should the scientist sometimes simply refuse to engage in some kinds of research because of moral concerns about the consequences of that research?

254. Morality and Modernity
(3-0-3) Solomon
An examination of the complex relation of morality and modernity, both to moral critiques of modernity and to the claim that morality is a particularly modern phenomenon.

255. Contemporary Social and Political Philosophy
(3-0-3) Sterba
A critical evaluation of the major political ideals of our time, namely, libertarian justice, welfare liberal justice, socialist justice, feminist justice, communitarian justice, and postmodern justice. Further consideration will be given to how these political ideals apply to a range of practical problems.

260. Virtues and Vices
(3-0-3) MacIntyre
An examination of what qualities of mind and character differentiate the good from the bad. Six different and rival answers to this question are considered: those of Confucius, Socrates, Aquinas, Machiavelli, Hume, and Nietzsche.

270A. Chinese Mosaic: Philosophy, Politics, Religion
(3-0-3) Jensen
This is a special topics class that provides an introduction to the diverse lifeways constituting the puzzle of the Chinese people. The course will chart this terrain of current Chinese imagination as it has been shaped from the contending, and often contentious, influences of religion, philosophy, and politics, introducing students to the heralded works of the Chinese intellectual tradition while requiring critical engagement with the philosophic and religious traditions animating this culture. Thus, as they learn about China, students also will reflect on how Chinese and Westerners have interpreted it.

261. Philosophy of Religion
(3-0-3) Bobik, Van Inwagen
A discussion of some basic issues: the nature of the philosophy of religion, the notion of God, grounds for belief and disbelief in God, faith, revelation, religious language and knowledge, verification, immortality.

263. Science and Religion
(3-0-3) Rea
An examination of the interrelation and tension between contemporary science and traditional religious belief.

264. Faith and Reason
(3-0-3) Freddoso, Jenkins
This course will deal with the relation between faith and reason. Some questions to be discussed are: Can the doctrines of the faith conflict with the deliverances of reason found in philosophy and science? Is it possible to defend the doctrines of the faith against the objections of nonbelievers in a non-question-begging way? How might one go about constructing an apologia for the Christian faith? Authors to be read include St. Thomas Aquinas, G.K. Chesterton and C.S. Lewis.

269. Thought of Aquinas
(3-0-3) McNerney, Neiman
A general introduction to Aquinas’ overall philosophical view.

265. Environmental Ethics
(3-0-3) DePaul, Sterba
The course will be an attempt to come to grips critically with the moral significance of contemporary concern for ecology and the environment.

266. Science, Technology, and Society
(3-0-3) Shreader-Frechette, McKim
This course focuses on the many ways in which science and technology interact with society and explores the character of the value-laden controversies which such interaction frequently produces.
PHILOSOPHY

352. Ethics, Ecology, Economics, and Energy
(3-0-3) Sayre
A critical examination of the following hypotheses:
(1) that continuing economic growth requires ever-increasing consumption of energy, (2) that increasing energy consumption results in increasing degradation of the biosphere, and (3) that increasing degradation of the biosphere poses an increasing threat to human existence.

354. Gender and Science
(3-0-3) Kourany
An exploration of the ways in which science is gendered, starting with the ways in which women have been excluded from science, and moving through such issues as the invisibility and shabby treatment of women with the products of scientific research, the contributions of women to science and whether these are different in kind from the contributions of men, and the differential effects of science on men’s and women’s lives.

357. Introduction to the Philosophy of Biology
(3-0-3) Moss
An examination of key concepts and controversies in contemporary biology. The meaning of gene, organism, and environment and their interrelationships in the context of development, evolutionary theory, and ecology are closely considered.

389. Philosophical Issues in Physics
(3-0-3) Howard
This course is intended for non-science students who desire to begin an examination of the origins of the modern laws of physics and for science students who wish to know the actual route to the discovery and broader implications of the formal theories with which they are already familiar.

401. Socrates and Athens
(3-0-3) O’Connor, Vacca
A study of the moral upheaval in Athens during the Peloponnesian War, using Thucydides, Aristophanes, Euripides, and Sophocles as primary sources. Then, an examination of Socrates as responding to that crisis, using Alcibiades I, Gorgias, and other dialogues.

402. The Moral Doctrine of Thomas Aquinas
(3-0-3) McNerny
A lecture course in which the main features of the moral teaching of Thomas Aquinas will be systematically discussed. The Summa theologica, prima secunda and Thomas’s Commentary on the Nicomachean Ethics will be the principal sources.

403. Plato
(3-0-3) Sayre
A detailed and systematic reading, in translation, of the fragments of the pre-Socrates and of the following Platonic dialogues: Euthyphro, Apology, Crito, Meno, Protagoras, Phaedo, Republic, Phaedrus, Symposium and Theaetetus.

404. Aristotle
(3-0-3) Loux
An examination and evaluation of Aristotle’s philosophy, with special emphasis on the logical, physical and metaphysical writings.

406. The Ethics of Thomas Aquinas
(3-0-3) Freddoso
A seminar on the philosophical thought of Aquinas, focusing upon the first part of the second part of the Summa Theologicae, viz., the treatises on happiness, action, passion, habit, virtue, sin, law and grace.

407. Descartes and Locke
(3-0-3) David
An attempt to understand and an evaluation of the opposing views of Descartes, the figurehead of modern rationalism, and Locke, the figurehead of modern empiricists.

408. Kant
(3-0-3) Ameriks
An examination of the background of Kant’s work, followed by a tracing of some of the principal themes of the Critiques, especially the major themes of The Critique of Pure Reason.

409. Philosophy and Literature Seminar
(4-0-4) O’Connor, Ziarek, Watson
This intensive four-credit seminar is the introduction to the concentration in philosophy and literature and will pursue interdisciplinary approaches to literary, theoretical and philosophical texts.

411. Augustine and William James
(3-0-3) Neiman
A course devoted, for the most part, to a careful reading of significant parts of Augustine’s Confessions and James’ The Varieties of Religious Experience. The goal is to come to an understanding of what these two great philosophers and psychologists can teach us about the spiritual quest.

418. Kant
(3-0-3) Neiman
An examination of the views of Kierkegaard and James on the traditional philosophical ideas of meaning and truth, knowledge and explanation.

419. Maritain: Science, Metaphysics, Mysticism
(3-0-3) Neiman
An attempt to better understand one particular type of knowledge—i.e., the grace-infused type of contemplation best exemplified by mystics such as St. John of the Cross.

420. Locke’s Moral Philosophy
(3-0-3) Shraer-Frecette
A careful, evaluative reading of Locke’s Letter Concerning Toleration, his Second Treatise on Civil Government, and his Questions Concerning the Law of Nature as well as a more cursory look at his Some Thoughts Concerning Education.

421. Three Catholic Philosophers
(3-0-3) MacInerny
A study of the enquiries of three 20th-century Catholic philosophers at work within three very different philosophical traditions, designed to identify the relationship between a commitment to philosophical enquiry and Catholic faith. To be considered are Jacques Maritain’s pursuit of questions opened up by Aristotle and Aquinas, Edith Stein’s progress beyond Husserl in her phenomenological enquiries, and G.E.M. Anscombe’s response to Wittgenstein.

422. Epistemology
(3-0-3) David, Stabenberg
The aim of this class is to provide an understanding of the fundamental issues and positions in the contemporary theory of knowledge.

423. Ethical Theory
(3-0-3) Solomon, Steebe
A systematic study of philosophical foundations of morality, drawing from major historical developments. Basic concepts of classical ethics will be developed—human nature, happiness or fulfillment, freedom, virtue—and their place in relation to moral judgment will be examined. Special attention to subjectivism vs. objectivism on the question of ethical norms and principles.

424. Metaphysics
(3-0-3) Flint, Freddoso, Loux, Van Inwagen
An examination of the nature of metaphysics and of those metaphysical issues that have proved central in Western philosophical tradition. Topics discussed will include mind-body problem, freedom of will, universals, substance, time, categories and God.

425. Topics in Philosophy of Religion
(3-0-3) Warfield
An examination of central topics in contemporary philosophy of religion and Christian philosophical theology.

427. Advanced Moral Problems
(3-0-3) Steebe
An in-depth discussion of three very important moral problems of our time: Affirmative Action, Animal Rights, and Sexual Harassment.

429. Philosophy of Mind
(3-0-3) Ramsey, Stabenberg
Dualist and reductionist emphasis in recent analyses of mind. Topics covered will include identity of mind and body, intentionality, actions and their explanation and problems about other minds.

431. Contemporary Philosophy of Religion
(3-0-3) Quinn
A critical examination of the philosophical import of some contemporary theologies of religion. The course will be organized around the attempt to discover a meaningful place for religious forms of life in a secular culture.
433. Justice Seminar
(3-0-3) O’Connor, Solomon, Weithman
A critical examination of major theories of justice, both deontological (e.g., contract theories) and teleological (e.g., utilitarian and virtue-based theories). The seminar focuses on the careful reading of one or more major theoretical works and requires substantial participation of the students both in the form of seminar papers and in oral discussion. This is the core course for the minor in philosophy, politics, and economics (PPE).

435. Philosophy of Science
(3-0-3) Howard, Kourany
A detailed consideration of the central methodological and epistemological questions bearing on science.

436. Religion and Science
(3-0-3) Gutting
An examination of the nature and limits of both scientific and religious knowledge, and a discussion of several cases in which science and religion seem to either challenge or support one another.

439. Faith and Reason
(3-0-3) Freddoso
An examination of some key theoretical issues concerning faith and reason. Among these issues are the nature of faith, the nature of intellectual inquiry, the role of affections in intellectual inquiry, the main competing accounts of intellectual inquiry and of the philosophical life. Authors to be read include Aquinas, Descartes, Hume, Mill, Nietzsche, Chesterton and Pope John Paul II.

440. Four Moral Philosophers
(3-0-3) Solomon
A careful reading of basic texts from Aristotle, Hume, Kant, and Nietzsche, and an examination of the ways in which their views are appropriated for purposes associated with the contemporary problematic in normative ethics.

442. The Origins of Analytic Philosophy
(3-0-3) Blanchette
An examination of fundamental writings at the beginning of the 20th century that ushered in the linguistic and logical tradition of analytic philosophy.

443. Analytic Philosophy
(3-0-3) McKim
An in-depth survey focusing on the techniques and presuppositions of linguistic analysis (of both ideal and ordinary language varieties) as they have been developed by English and American philosophers in this century.

444. Postmodern Analytic Philosophy
(3-0-3) Gutting
A study of several philosophers who combine an analytic commitment to clarity and argument with an interest in the history and critique of modern thought. Philosophers to be considered are Richard Rorty, Charles Taylor, Bernard Williams, and Martha Nussbaum.

448. Philosophy of Language
(3-0-3) Blanchette, David, Shin
The aim of this course is to provide an overview of the field. Major topics include the relation between truth and meaning; truth-conditional semantics; the meaning of sentences, proper names, definite descriptions, general terms and indexicals; the relations between expressing a belief, making a statement and uttering a sentence.

449. Phenomenology
(3-0-3) Watson
An introduction to the arguments and themes of phenomenology, a school of philosophy based on the description of lived experience that had broad impact on 20th-century philosophy.

452. Contemporary German Philosophy: Habermas
(3-0-3) Moss
The course will attempt to cover the “formative” phase of Habermas’ career extending from his point of departure from Marx, and his analysis of the public sphere, through his critique of the human sciences and up to the beginning of his theory of communicative action.

455. Anselm
(3-0-3) Flint
An examination of the major philosophical and theological writings of St. Anselm. His Proslogion, Prologion, and Cur Deus Homo will be of central concern, but several lesser-known texts will also be read. Topics discussed in these writings include arguments for the existence of God, the divine nature, the Trinity, the Incarnation, freedom (and its compatibility with divine foreknowledge), and truth.

456. Divine Attributes
(3-0-3) Flint
A consideration of the attributes Christians have traditionally ascribed to God, such as omnipotence, omniscience, omnibenevolence, eternality and simplicity. The course will examine both the reasons for attributing such properties to God and the ways in which philosophers have tried to explicate these concepts.

457. Wittgenstein
(3-0-3) Sayre
A careful reading and detailed discussion of several of Wittgenstein’s works, including Tractatus Logico-Philosophicus, Philosophical Investigations, Culture and Value, On Certainty, and Remarks on the Foundations of Mathematics.

458. Classical Philosophy of Religion
(3-0-3) Quinn
A critical examination of some classical philosophical theories of religion. The central focus of the course will be issues concerning justification and explanation in religion.
459. Philosophical Poets: Dante and Claudel
(3-0-3) McInerney
A discussion of the difference between poetic philosophical modes of discourse, with special reference to Dante and Paul Claudel.

460. Joint Seminar in Philosophy and Theology
(3-0-3) Staff
Prerequisite: Six hours in theology; permission is required.
This seminar, led by a theologian and a philosopher, will examine an issue in which the differing approaches of philosophy and theology may prove fruitful. Both the topic and the instructors will change from year to year.

469. Philosophy of Law
(3-0-3) Warfield
A survey of theoretical topics in philosophy of law and the relation between philosophy of law and other areas of philosophical inquiry, and an examination of topics in “applied” philosophy of law.

471. Episodes in Ethics
(3-0-3) Machnery
A study of three debates in the history of ethics, that in which Aristotle responds to earlier Greek thought and practice, that in which Aquinas confronts problems of law in the 13th century, and that in which Hume, Diderot, Kant and Mill define moral modernity.

472. Kierkegaard and Newman
(3-0-3) McInerney
An examination of the thought of two 19th-century figures of fundamental importance: Soren
Kierkegaard (1813-1855) and John Henry
Newman (1801-1890).

474. Philosophy and Psychiatry
In the 20th Century
(3-0-3) Manier
A course dealing with (1) the intellectual history of psychiatry from the time of Freud and Kraepelin to the present, (2) the social history of the care of the mentally ill since World War II, and (3) the interpretation and critique of Freud and psychiatry.

475. Topics in Philosophical Logic:
Modal Metatheory
(3-0-3) Bays
A consideration of topics in the metatheory of modal logic, including basic correspondence theory, and completeness and the finite modal property.

478. Do Faith and Reason Clash?—Religion and Science
(3-0-3) Plantinga
A course focusing on such questions as: Does current science, or perhaps the method of science imply or suggest that Christian and theistic ways of thinking of ourselves are out of date or superseded?
Are religion and science two different ways of coming to know important truths about ourselves? Can they conflict? If they do, what is the right response —give up the science? Give up the religious ways of thinking? Try not to think about them at the same time? Or what?

479. Environmental Risk Assessment
(3-0-3) Shrader-Frechette
An investigation of the probabilistic and decisiontheoretic methods of evaluating environmental haz-ARDS. Emphasis is on the epistemological and ethical assumptions in the methods and the consequences following from their acceptance or use.

480. Ethics and Risk
(3-0-3) Shrader-Frechette
An investigation of classical ethical papers, all in contemporary, analytic, normative ethics, that attempt to develop the ethical theory necessary to deal with legitimate imposition of risk of harm.

482. Philosophy of Math
(3-0-3) Blanchette, Bays
An examination of such questions as: How do we come to know truths of mathematics, since we can not see or touch its (apparent) subject matter? Are there really such purely mathematical things as numbers and functions, or are these just useful fictions? How are abstract mathematical truths able to play such an important role in empirical applications? No particular mathematical background is presupposed.

483. Ethics of Scientific Research
(3-0-3) Shrader-Frechette
An analysis of the ethical theories provided by contemporary philosophers to guide scientific research and an investigation of the different norms provided by alternative ethical theories. The course will cover professional codes of ethics adopted by scientific societies, as well as case studies of ethical problems in community ecology, conservation biology, toxicology, and engineering design.

485. Philosophy of Human Biology
(3-0-3) Moss
An examination of the evolution of such things as advanced motor control capable of dancing and mimetic communication, human emotion and sexuality, and human developmental plasticity. The significance of human biological specificity for questions in the philosophies of language, mind, ethics, and aesthetics will be considered.

486. Philosophy of Social Science
(3-0-3) McKim
An exploration of central philosophical issues that arise from reflection on the nature and practice of social science, viz., causal/explanatory vs. interpr-ETIVE conceptions of social inquiry, individual rationality and cultural relativism, the role of values/IDEOLOGY in social theorizing, and questions about the metaphysical status of social reality (holism vs. individualism).

487. Biomedical Ethics and Public Health Risk
(3-0-3) Shrader-Frechette
An analysis of the ethical theories provided by contemporary philosophers to guide research and practice in biomedicine. The course will focus on analysis of contemporary public health problems created by environmental/technological pollution and will address classic cases of biomedical ethics problems.

490. Topics in Philosophical Anthropology: Emotions
(3-0-3) Moss
An examination of recent empirical work in areas including neurobiology, evolutionary biology, and developmental psychology which attempt to characterize and explain the causes of emotion. The course will survey some of this new work and attempt to bring it into a larger philosophical perspective.

491. Mind and Language
(3-0-3) Shin
An examination of the Innateness Hypothesis as an answer to the question of how human beings acquire their first languages.

497. Directed Readings
(V-0-V) Staff
Prerequisites: Dean’s list average, written consent of instructor and approval of department. Advanced seniors are permitted to take a tutorial with a faculty member; readings will be assigned in a particular area and writing assignments required.

499. Senior Thesis
(3-0-3) Staff
An opportunity for senior philosophy majors to work on a sustained piece of research in a one-to-one relationship with a faculty member.
Philosophy and Theology Joint Major

Director: Jennifer Herdt, theology

Faculty:
- Additional faculty for the joint major are drawn from the departments of philosophy and theology.

Program of Studies. The joint major is intended for undergraduates who are intrigued by philosophical and theological ideas and who have an equal commitment to both disciplines. It seeks to equip such students to handle theology and philosophy adeptly. The major is structured, providing undergraduates with a suitable introduction to the study of both disciplines, but also flexible, granting students considerable scope for the pursuit of their own interests.

The joint major offers the opportunity for an informed investigation of religious and philosophical ideas and should appeal especially to those who intend to pursue graduate work in philosophy or theology.

The joint major incorporates the University requirements in the two departments and most of the formal requirements of the first majors in theology and philosophy. Students in the joint major will take the two-semester sequence in Christian Traditions and an upper-level course in Scripture. The joint major, however, does not require the one-credit proseminar in theology.

Other formal requirements are peculiar to the joint major. Students will study a classical language for two semesters. (For practical as well as pedagogical reasons, this will normally be Greek.) Majors will also be expected to take the joint seminar offered each spring. Each seminar, led by a theologian and a philosopher, will examine an issue in which the differing approaches of philosophy and theology may prove fruitful. The topic and instructors will change from year to year. Finally, each major will submit a senior thesis prepared under the direction of two advisors, drawn from each department. At the option of the directors, this thesis may be presented and discussed in an informal colloquium consisting of the other students in the joint major.

The remaining courses in the joint major will be at the discretion of the student. Normally taken at the 400 level, there should be an equal distribution in the electives between theology and philosophy. However, students who wish may devote up to six hours within the joint major to additional language work. These hours may add to the classical language previously studied, or used to begin another language of significance for philosophical and theological work.

The joint major differs from a first major in one discipline and a supplementary major in the other in that the latter requires 55 credit hours, whereas the joint major requires 60. Furthermore, the joint major calls for language instruction beyond what the University requires for all undergraduates. Finally, the joint seminars should prove especially challenging, inviting students to explore important topics in an interdisciplinary way. These features should make the joint major particularly attractive to students preparing for advanced study.

Requirements in Philosophy:
- PHIL 101 or 201, and 2XX-level course (University-required courses; a higher-level course may be substituted for the latter).
- PHIL 301 and 302. History of Philosophy I and II.
- PHIL 313. Formal Logic.

Requirements in Theology:
- THEO 100 or 200 and 2XX-level course (University-required courses).
- THEO 395 and 396. Christian Traditions I and II.
- THEO 401 or 411. Upper division scripture course.

Plus:
- Classical language (normally Greek) — two semesters.
- Joint seminar(s).
- Senior thesis.
- Electives (including up to an additional six credit hours in language study).

Program of Studies. The Department of Political Science offers its majors a liberal education in an important field of the social sciences. The major aims at educating the student in basic problems in understanding politics. The department offers courses in four main subfields: American politics, comparative politics, international relations and political theory. Students majoring in political science go on to work in a wide variety of vocations, including government, law, nongovernmental organizations, teaching, politics, journalism and business.

Requirements. The major requires a minimum of 10 courses: an introductory 100- or 200-level course in each of the four subfields, four 300- or 400-level (below 491) courses and two senior writing seminars. When choosing their upper-level courses, students are free to specialize in a subfield or take courses in several different fields.

All majors are required to take a senior writing seminar or 500-level course in each semester of their senior year. These seminars are numbered 491 in the fall and 492 in the spring. Pi Sigma Alpha members may take these courses in the second semester of their junior year, with permission. These seminars give seniors the opportunity to take small, discussion-oriented courses, as well as do more writing in their field. The senior thesis can take the place of one of these seminars.

Students on the dean’s list may also take individual directed readings.

Honors Track. Students in the department may receive departmental honors. To graduate with departmental honors a student must have a 3.55 cumulative average and a 3.55 average in the major, must complete a senior honors essay or area studies essay with a grade of at least B-plus, and must replace one of their 300-level courses with an advanced course. The advanced course may be either an additional writing seminar, a 500-level course, or the research design course.

Senior Thesis. Students who achieve a grade point average of 3.5 or above are encouraged to write a senior thesis in their senior year. This year-long project involves working closely with a faculty reader on original research and offers the opportunity to explore more deeply and independently a topic of the student’s choice.

Pi Sigma Alpha. Students who have taken a minimum of four political science courses, who have received no grade lower than a B in their government courses and who have a cumulative grade point average of 3.55 or above are eligible for Pi Sigma Alpha, the national political science honor society.

Course Descriptions. The following course descriptions give the number and title of each course. Lecture hours per week, laboratory and/or tutorial hours per week and credits each semester are in parentheses. The instructor’s name is also included.

140. Introduction to American Politics (3-0-3) Staff
This course surveys the basic institutions and practices of American politics. The course aims to make students better informed and more articulate. It examines the institutional and constitutional framework of American politics and identifies the key ideas needed to understand the subject and develop a basis for evaluating politics today. The premise of the course is that American government has advantages and disadvantages alike, which come from the same source—the Constitution and the American approach to power that it reflects. Themes of the course include the logic and consequences of checks and balances and the separation of powers; the causes and consequences of divided government; the importance of procedures and the built-in biases of institutions and procedures; the ways American government both fragments and concentrates power; the implications of America’s weak party system; the nomination, campaign-finance, congressional, and budgetary reforms of the 1970s; the ways those reforms have shaped American politics today; and the trends and tendencies of the past 30 years. Although the course will prepare prospective political science majors for further study of American politics, its primary aim is to introduce students of all backgrounds and interests to the information, concepts, and ideas that will enable them to understand American politics better and help them to become more thoughtful and responsible citizens. This course fulfills a political science major requirement.

141. Introduction to International Relations (3-0-3) Staff
This course provides a basic understanding of the major concepts, issues, and theories in international relations. What explains conflict and cooperation in world politics? We will examine competing theories of state behavior, briefly review the evolution of international history, and discuss enduring and contemporary issues such as interstate war; civil, ethnic, and religious conflict; proliferation of weapons of mass destruction; terrorism; international trade and finance; globalization; the information revolution; and international law, organization, and institutions. The ultimate goal of the course is to enhance our capacity to think critically about the basic forces that drive international politics, thereby improving our ability to evaluate and shape our world. Discussion sections use historical and current events to illustrate concepts introduced in lectures. This course fulfills a political science major requirement.

142. Introduction to Comparative Politics (3-0-3) Staff
This course is an introduction to the main themes and areas of the comparative politics subfield. The course covers issues such as regime type, Leninism and socialism’s collapse, authoritarianism and authoritarian collapse, Islam and theocracy, transitions to democracy, democratic state-building, political parties and electoral systems, economic reform, and civil and ethnic conflict. Geographically, the course introduces students to the institutions and politics of most regions of the world. The emphasis is on East Asia, Africa, the former Soviet Union, South Asia, and Latin America. This course fulfills a political science major requirement.

240. Introduction to American Government (3-0-3) Staff
This course provides students with an overview of the American political system. Topics include the presidency, Congress, the Supreme Court, bureaucracy, separation of powers, federalism, political parties, interest groups, the public policy process, voting, public opinion, and participation. This course cannot be taken if you have already taken GOVT 140.

241. International Relations (3-0-3) Staff
This course provides students with an understanding of historical and current events in world politics. As such, the course has three central objectives: to introduce various theoretical frameworks for analyzing international political and economic events, to provide an overview of substantive topics in international relations, and to supply a basic understanding of contemporary international events. We explore substantive issues such as cooperation and conflict in international relations, the causes of war, nuclear proliferation, regional free trade agreements, the causes and effects of economic globalization, and the role of international law and institutions. Discussion sections use historical case studies and current events to illustrate concepts introduced in lectures.

242. Comparative Politics (3-0-3) Staff
This course is an introduction to the main themes and areas of the comparative politics subfield. The course covers issues such as regime type, Leninism and socialism’s collapse, authoritarianism and authoritarian collapse, Islam and theocracy, transitions to democracy, democratic state-building, political parties and electoral systems, economic reform, and civil and ethnic conflict. Geographically, the course introduces students to the institutions and politics of most regions of the world. The emphasis is on East Asia, Africa, the former Soviet Union, South Asia, and Latin America. This course fulfills a political science major requirement.
242. Comparative Government
(3-0-3) Staff
This course poses three questions in the study of politics: (1) Why are some countries democratic and others authoritarian? (2) In what ways do democratic regimes vary from one another? (3) What constitutes “good” government? In answering these questions, we study two different types of mobilization (nationalist and developmental) and four countries: the United States, Russia, China, and Great Britain.

243. Political Theory
(3-0-3) Staff
This course serves as the departments’ required introductory course in political theory, and also as a University elective. It introduces students to key questions in political theory, such as the nature of law, the question of conventional versus natural moral standards, the relationship between individual and community, and the relationship between individualistic versus community-oriented political theories. Authors studied include Madison, Aristotle, Aquinas, Hobbes, Locke, Scott Momaday, Sophocles, Plato, and Flannery O’Connor. Students will write three one-page papers analyzing specific cases, and then two four-page papers. There is a comprehensive final. In Friday discussion groups, students will critically apply the materials covered in class to specific cases.

ELECTIVE COURSES IN THE MAJOR

AMERICAN GOVERNMENT AND POLITICS

304. Presidential Leadership
(3-0-3) Arnold
This course examines the role of the presidency in the American regime and its change over time. Particular attention will be given to expectations about presidential leadership through the course of American political history. Beginning with questions about the original design and role of the presidency, the course turns to consideration of the role of leadership styles for change and continuity in American politics. Finally, cases of presidential leadership are studied to comprehend the way leadership and political context interact.

305. The American Congress
(3-0-3) Roos
This class will expose the student to the practical workings of the U.S. Congress, some major theories attempting to explain those workings, and some of the methods and materials needed to do research on Congress. It will place the study of Congress in the context of democratic theory, and in particular the problem of the way in which the institution across time grapples with the problem of the common good.

306. Gender and the Constitution
(3-0-3) M. Zuckert
This course will cover the decisions of the Supreme Court in the area of gender issues from the 19th-century beginnings of a constitutional law of gender through such 20th-century issues as abortion, equal rights, and affirmative action. Class will focus not only on court cases but also on the broader constitutional, ethical and philo-sophical implications.

308. American Voting and Elections
(3-0-3)
This course will examine voting and opinions, and the linkage between political leaders and the mass public. Possible topics include an introduction to electoral analysis; the history of recent electoral politics; the nature of political participation, especially the rationality of voting turnout and non-electoral specialization; party identification and opinions, attitudes and ideology; social groups and cultural identities; mass media and image campaigns; and differences between presidential and congressional elections.

309. Religion and Politics
(3-0-3)
An examination of the linkage among religious beliefs, worldviews, group identifications, political attitudes and behavior, based on literature in political science, sociology, psychology and theology. Topics include the meaning and measurement of religiosity; religious and anti-religious values embedded in American political institutions; religious worldviews and political philosophy; cue giving and political mobilization by religious groups, denominational traditions, partisanship and issue positions; religious movements, social conflict and political coalitions.

313. Constitutional Law
(3-0-3) Kornmesser
This course examines the principles of American Constitutional law, the process of constitutional interpretation, and the role of the Supreme Court in the American political system. Topics covered are presidential war powers, congressional-executive relations, free speech, church-state relations, the right to life (abortion, right to die, and death penalty), race and gender discrimination, and the American federal system. A good deal of attention is given over to recent personnel changes on the Supreme Court and the extent to which these changes are reflected in the court’s opinions. A background in American national government is desirable.

314. Race and the Constitution
(3-0-3) M. Zuckert
This course will cover the decisions of the Supreme Court in the area of race relations, from the 19th-century problem of fugitive slaves to current problems involving school desegregation, affirmative action and “private” acts of race discrimination. Class will focus not only on court cases but also on the broader constitutional and philosophical implications.

315G. Comparative Constitutionalism
(3-0-3) Langan
This course examines the principles of constitutional law and constitutional interpretation of two modern federal constitutional systems. We will explore how the people, politicians, and jurists of each country understand the role of constitutional interpretation, the role of supreme courts in the political lives of each nation, and the meaning of individual rights and liberties in each political system. The course will help students understand the different interpretive theories of law as well as the role of constitutional law in separation of power conflicts and the political and legal disputes over civil liberties.

318. Introduction to Public Policy
(3-0-3) Ayala
The objective of this course is to introduce students to the process of public policy formation in American politics. The course will be divided into three parts. The first section will encompass a brief review of some of the more important mechanisms of American politics that affect the legislative process (political participation, interest groups, congressional elections, etc.). We will then engage in a general review of how such factors have affected the direction and tone of federal public policy over the past 30 years. The final two sections of the course will be devoted to detailed analysis of two public policy areas of particular interest to younger voters: education reform and drug laws. Building on the earlier readings and the analytical tools developed, we will examine the current debates and prospects for reform in these policy areas, with an eye toward understanding the political realities of public policy formation.

332. Arab-Israeli Conflict
(3-0-3) Dowty
This course tracks the Arab-Israeli conflict from its origins in the late 19th century to the present, making special use of primary sources that express differing perspectives in their full intensity. Current issues of the conflict will be analyzed in depth with the help of current periodical and electronic sources. Classes will include a mixture of lectures, video, and role-playing. There will be a midterm exam and a short policy paper.
333. International Environmental Politics
(3-0-3) Connally
This course presents an introduction to the role of states, NGOs, international organizations, scientists, and other actors in international environmental politics. We consider policy instruments such as economic incentives, international treaties, and aid. Case studies include ozone depletion, deforestation, biodiversity, climate change, issues of developing countries, acid rain, trade and the environment, and UNCED.

333W. Soc Con Sem: Washington, D.C.
Crosslisted from the Center for Social Concerns. See “Center for Social Concerns” in the front section of this Bulletin.

339V. Diplomacy of U.S. Foreign Policy
(3-0-3) Kamman
The United States emerged from World War II in a new peacetime role as a superpower. We had to discover for ourselves how to combine diplomacy and military power in a manner consistent with our democratic principles. While the policy choices were stark in the days of the Cold War, they have become more complex in recent years.

Presented by a career diplomat who headed U.S. overseas missions in four countries, the course emphasizes case studies and the practical problems that have confronted U.S. leaders from the end of World War II to the present. The issues treated will illustrate the height of tensions in the Cold War, the emergence of détente and deterrence, and the challenges of the global agenda after the end of the Cold War.

The course aims to help the student understand current foreign policy issues, which will be discussed briefly in class. A research paper (10 pages), a midterm exam, and a final exam are required.

341G. Latin American Politics and Economic Development
(3-0-3) Castiglioni
During the past few decades, Latin America has undergone deep political and economic change. The patterns of political polarization and the implementation of import substitution industrialization models that characterized the region were altered by the emergence of bureaucratic authoritarian regimes. From the 1980s on, Latin American nations sought to reinstall democracy and promote economic development, yet the paths they followed to those ends have been quite diverse, as have their achievements. This course examines those divergent paths during the past four decades. After introducing students to some contextual information on the region, the course will examine the different roads to democratic breakdown, the emergence of authoritarian regimes, and the contrasting paths to redemocratization and development.

346. Democratic Regimes
(3-0-3) Helmke
This course surveys the main theoretical and empirical issues around the topic of democratization. It will examine competing conceptions of democracy, the conditions under which democracies emerge and consolidate, and the impact of democratic regimes on economic development and political accountability. Because institutions in democratic regimes vary widely from country to country, particular emphasis will be placed on examining institutional choices and the subsequent effects of specific institutions—including presidentialism, parliamentarianism, political parties, and non-elected institutions such as courts, the military, and bureaucracies—on democratic governance. Empirical examples will be drawn from a broad array of countries in Latin America, Russia, and Eastern Europe.

375. Machiavellianism
(3-0-3) Staff
Machiavelli is notorious for promoting a certain “hard-nosed realism” in political analysis and practice. This course explores Machiavellianism in the master himself and in the tradition to which we give his name. We will read representatives of Machiavellian republication, including a novel with a decidedly Machiavellian lesson (Mark Twain’s Tom Sawyer), and conclude with the recent book by John Mearesheimer, often thought to be the leading Machiavellian analyst of international politics of our day.

377. Politics and Conscience
(3-0-3) Keys
Against a backdrop of large-scale society, mass movements, and technological bureaucracy, the invocation of “conscience” recalls the individual human person as a meaningful actor in the political sphere. But what is conscience, and what are its rights and responsibilities? What is it about conscience that ought to command governmental respect, and are there any limits to its autonomy? What role should conscience play in questions of war and peace, law-abidingness and civil disobedience, citizenship and political leadership? And how does the notion of conscience connect with concepts of natural law and natural rights, nationality and prudence, religion and tolerance? This course engages these questions through select readings from the history of political thought. We also will consider various 20th-century reflections on conscience, expressed in essays, plays, short stories, speeches, and declarations.

416. Constitution and Federalism
(3-0-3) Barber
This course takes up our oldest and perhaps our most pervasive constitutional problem: the proper relationship between the powers of the national government and the powers of the states. The root of this problem lies in the kind of country and people the Constitution commits us to be. Its many branches include political and legal questions relating to the regulation of the economy, federal power, and the nation’s morals, race relations in America, the nature of community in America and the nation’s obligation to the poor. This course is designed for undergraduates with a background in American national government.

International Relations

320. Theories of War
(3-0-3) Vayrynen
The course explores major theories of war from Machiavelli to Martin van Creveld. Rather than focusing on military details, the course tries to contextualize the theories of war and military strategies, to show how they reflect economic conditions, technological capabilities, dominant political ideologies, and cultural beliefs of each era. Therefore, theories are transformed with changes in these underlying factors. The emphasis of the course will be on the conceptions by the 19th- and 20th-century political and social theorists about the nature, functions, and consequences of warfare. These conceptions concern the role of war in state formation, bureaucratization of society, economic development, and ideological currents. The authors to be discussed in detail include Carl von Clausewitz, Alexis de Tocqueville, Thorstein Veblen, Joseph Schumpeter, Raymond Aron, Henry Kissinger, and Martin van Creveld. The course will also pay attention to the political and economic foundations of deterrence and other doctrines concerning nuclear weapons.

321. Regionalism in International Relations
(3-0-3) Vayrynen
The course explores different theories of regionalism and its manifestations in international relations. Theories range from the early studies of regional integration in the 1960s through the focus on regional conflict formations in the 1980s to the recent interest of this area of research. Current studies on regionalism view it as an outcome of economic processes rather than a result of governmental decisions.
Region in the Americas, Asia, and Europe can be thus construed as a response to the forces of globalization, an effort to create both a shelter and a base for expansion vis-a-vis external competitors. In the security realm, regional cooperation is increasingly focused on the prevention and management of local conflicts and the creation of peaceful security communities. In addition to theories, the course covers several regional integration schemes, such as the European Union (EU), the North American Free Trade Area (NAFTA), the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS), the Gulf Cooperation Council (GCC), the Association of South East Asian Nations (ASEAN), and Mercosur in the Southern Cone.

324. Introduction to American Foreign Policy
(3-0-3) Lindley
The United States is the most powerful state in the world today. Its actions are important not just for U.S. citizens, but also affect others go to war, whether they will win their wars, whether they receive economic aid, whether they will go broke, or whether they will starve. What determines U.S. foreign policy? What is the national interest? When do we go to war? Would you send U.S. soldiers into war? If so, into which wars and for what reasons? How do our economic policies affect others? Does trade help or hurt the U.S. economy and its citizens? We first study several theories about foreign policy. We then examine the U.S. foreign policy process, including the president, Congress, the bureaucracy, the media, and public opinion. To see how this all works, we turn to the history of U.S. foreign policy, from Washington’s farewell address through the World Wars and the Cold War to the Gulf War. We then study several major issue areas, including weapons of mass destruction, trade and economics, and the environment. Finally, we develop and debate forecasts and strategies for the future. This course requires papers about the history of American foreign policy and about a current policy problem, as well as as a comprehensive final. Participation, debate, and oral presentation skills are also important.

326. International Law and Institutions
(3-0-3) Mosley
International law and institutions are increasingly important for understanding the nature of world politics. This course investigates the interaction between international law and international politics. We examine how international institutions operate, the significance of international law to state behavior, and the connections between international norms and domestic law. The substantive issues addressed in this course include trade, human rights, and environmental protection.

328. International Organization
(3-0-3)
Examination of governance in international relations, including both formal and informal institutions. The functioning of organizations such as the United Nations, International Monetary Fund, World Trade Organization, European Union, and multilateral development banks. Research papers on topics including peacekeeping and humanitarian intervention, political conflicts surrounding trade liberalization, and assessment of economic development programs.

330. International Political Economy
(3-0-3) Mosley
This course examines the interactions between international politics and international economics by providing students with an overview of several key issues in international political economy. We begin with a brief overview of the economic rationale for trade and financial relations. We then examine the recent history of the world economy: How did the international trade and monetary systems operate in the early and mid-20th century, and what role did politics play in these systems? We then devote the bulk of the class to considering issues central to contemporary international political economy: Trade liberalization, coordination and cooperation in monetary policy (including the advent of the single currency in Europe), implications of national and regional financial crises, and the links among economic globalization, environmental regulation, and human rights.

331. International Relations of the Middle East
(3-0-3) Dowey
Prerequisite: POLS 141 or 241.
This course covers the relations among the contemporary states of the Middle East, with emphasis on the Arab-Israel conflict. It includes the historical and cultural background in the region, the foreign policy perspectives of contemporary states and current diplomatic issues.

334. International Relations in East Asia
(3-0-3) Moody
This course is intended to provide the cultural, historical and political background necessary for understanding East Asia’s current conditions and speculating about its prospects.

335. U.S. Relations with Latin America
(3-0-3) Francis
This class begins with a historical overview of United States relations with Latin America since World War II. It will analyze separately the Latin American politics of the presidents from Kennedy to Clinton. It will also focus on some particular questions, including the role of economic integration, theories of declining hegemony, the Cuban situation, illegal immigration into the United States and other problems. A number of videotapes will be shown during the semester. The form of the class and some of the assignments will be influenced by the size of the class, but at least one piece of research will be required, one group project, a midterm test and a final examination.

348. The European Union
(3-0-3) Mosley
In this course, we will explore the process of financial and trade integration in Europe and the political forces that either promote or retard further integration. For example, we will consider the role of national governments, of national trade unions, and of business interest groups in the integration process. We will devote particular attention to the development and implementation of European Monetary Union and to the expansion of the European Union’s involvement to the areas of social policy and political cooperation. Students will read general course materials and will select additional reading materials that deal with particular topics or nations.

379. Latin American International Relations
(3-0-3) Hagopian
This course examines the international relations of Latin America with an emphasis on what determines U.S. policy toward Latin America, and the policies of Latin American states toward the United States, other regions of the world, and each other. It analyzes recurring themes in U.S.-Latin American relations, including the response of the United States to dictatorships, expropriations of U.S.-owned property, and revolution. It also studies new directions and issues in Latin America’s international relations, e.g., trade policy, the environment, migration, and drugs in a post-Cold War world.

481. The International Economy and Domestic Politics
(3-0-3) Mosley
In this course, we examine the reciprocal interaction between the international economy and domestic political processes, with an emphasis on developed democracies. The course employs concepts based in international relations, international economics and comparative politics. The first part of the course introduces the basic concepts needed to analyze the connections between the international economy and domestic politics. The second part of the course focuses on the ways in which private ("demand side") actors — industries, firms, and investors — respond to changing international economic conditions. We consider how domestic actors are affected by and respond to international trade and financial relations.

301. Leadership and Social Change
(3-0-3) Scully
Prerequisite: Permission of instructor. This course is intended to introduce seminar participants to themes in leadership. Through readings, presentations, and other media (such as film and interaction with visitors), the course aims to provide critical reflections on the nature and sources of differing types of leadership and authority, and a deeper understanding of the vocation to lead.
343. European Politics and Institutions (3-0-3) Gould
This course considers politics in Europe. We will examine the literature on three major issues: regional integration, origins of modern political authority, and industrial political-economy. Readings on the European Union, Germany, France, Spain, and contemporary political debates.

347. Nuts and Bolts of Russian Politics (3-0-3) Merritt
How are we to understand a return to the symbolism of Russian royalty by those who were communists and now claim to be democrats? The frequent squabbles between president and parliament, including the October 1993 shelling of the Parliament Building? The high assassination rate for journalists, bankers and police officers? This course focuses on the nuts and bolts of Russian politics, including the similarities and differences between Communist Russia and the current Russian state. Familiarity with Soviet politics is a crucial precondition to analysis of the modern political scene, so students first develop an understanding of the nature of Bolshevik rule and its collapse.

351. Politics of Tropical Africa (3-0-3) Walsh
Following an introduction to traditional political institutions, the colonial inheritance and the rise of African nationalism, the course concentrates on the current economic and political problems of tropical Africa. This includes case studies of political organizations, ideologies and government institutions in Ghana, Nigeria and Tanzania.

352. Politics of Southern Africa (3-0-3) Walsh
This course focuses on the key state of the region — the republic of South Africa. After outlining the political history of apartheid, the phenomenon of Afrikaner nationalism, and the rise of African nationalism and the liberation movements, attention turns to the country’s escalating turmoil of the 1980s and resulting political transition in the 1990s. South Africa’s political and economic prospects are also examined. The semester concludes with a survey of the transitions that brought South Africa’s neighboring territories to independence, the destabilization strategies of the apartheid regime and United States policy in that region.

354. Political Economy of Post-Industrial States (3-0-3) Messina
This course investigates the nexus between politics and economics in the advanced industrial democracies. After a brief discussion of the theoretical principles of economic liberalism, the course focuses on the impact of economic actors and conditions on politics and the political and economic consequences of the organization of the world economy along market principles. It concludes by examining the relationship between domestic politics and the project for economic integration in the case of the European Union.

355. Parties and Party Systems (3-0-3) Coppedge
Political parties are the most crucial link between state and society in democratic regimes. They are responsible for recruiting candidates, devising programs, shaping the political agenda, aggregating interests, organizing the work of legislatures, bargaining with executives, and defending democracy. In some countries, they also help to administer government programs. Parties around the world vary tremendously in the ways they perform, or fail to perform, these functions; yet whether parties perform these tasks well or poorly, party characteristics powerfully influence the quality and stability of democracy. This course examines parties in comparative perspective, exploring how the nature of parties and party systems affects democratic governance primarily in Europe, Latin America, and the United States.

356. Tradition and Modernization in China and Japan (3-0-3) Moody
This course compares the traditional social, political, cultural and economic systems of China and Japan and compares the way in which each system has changed in response to the intrusion of the Western powers into east Asia. It concludes with an extended discussion and analysis of the contemporary situation in each country. Class requirements will include class participation, a midterm examination, two brief discussion papers dealing with material relevant to the course, and a final examination.
Comparative Politics of Eastern Europe (3-0-3) McAdams
An examination of the principal characteristics of Eastern European politics and institutions in the post-war era, focusing on the communist experience, relations with the Soviet Union, and post-1989 efforts to create stable democracies and capitalist economies.

Chinese Politics (3-0-3) Moody
Study of the contemporary Chinese political system and process in the light of Chinese history and culture. Some of the topics treated include the traditional political order; the revolutionary movements; the rise of communism; Maoism and the rejection of Maoism; the political structure; leadership, personalities, and power struggles; economic policy; social policy and movements; problems of corruption and instability; and prospects for democratic development. There will be some attention to Taiwan and Hong Kong as special Chinese societies.

Public Policy and Bureaucracy (3-0-3) Arnold
This course explores the process, substance, and efficacy of public policymaking and policy implementation in the United States. We begin by asking: Why do some problems become public issues while others do not? Attention is given to how government identifies problems and formulates policies meant to address them. Then we ask, once formulated, how policies are implemented. The course will examine government’s “menu” of options for policy implementation. Student research papers will focus on the evolution over time of a specific policy, examining how that policy’s implementation affected its impact.

Requirements for the course include a midterm exam, a research paper, and a final exam. During the semester, students will be required to prepare several shorter papers as progress reports on their research papers. Students taking this course already should have taken POLS 140 or 240, Introduction to American Government. It also will be helpful to have had an Introduction to Economics course.

Judicial Politics (3-0-3) Colucci
This course examines the effect of the legal system on American politics, government, and society. We begin by reviewing the institutions, actors, and processes of the legal system, focusing on the institutional and individual influences on judicial decision-making. In the second part of the semester, we closely analyze the political consequences of legal decisions in areas such as criminal law, race and education—including desegregation, school finance, and school choice—abortion, the death penalty, and homosexuality rights. We conclude by evaluating the extent to which courts can and should be expected to bring about social and political change.

Building the European Union (3-0-3) Messina
This course introduces the contemporary project for greater economic, political, and security integration among the current 15 members of the European Union within its appropriate historical context, its current economic and political setting, and its projected future ambitions. The course is thus very much concerned with recent events and important European events-in-the-making, including the implementation of the Amsterdam Treaty, the expansion of the membership of the European Union and EU-sponsored strategies to facilitate democratic transitions in Eastern Europe.

International Political Economy (3-0-3) Staff
This course examines the interactions between international politics and international economics. We begin with a brief exploration of the economic rationale for trade and financial relations and then examine the recent political history of global trade and finance. Topics include global and regional trade liberalization, coordination and cooperation in monetary policy (including the advent of the single currency in Europe), causes and implications of financial crises, and the linkages among economic globalization, environmental regulation, and human rights.

Latin American Politics (3-0-3) Mainwaring, Welna, Hagopian, Coppedge
This course is an introduction to Latin American politics. Thematically, we will focus on two of the great issues facing this region of the world at the end of the 20th century: democratization and strategies for promoting economic development. After spending the first part of the course examining these two issues in a broad way, we will then analyze these same issues, but focused on Brazil, Chile and Mexico.

Colombia Pol: Drug Runners (3-0-3) Hinojosa
Colombia is a country in crisis. It is home to a civil war that dates back some 40 years, has one of the world’s largest concentrations of internally displaced people, and is the center of the world’s largest and most sophisticated drug trafficking networks. The civil war is being waged by two leftist insurgent movements (the FARC and the ELN) and a right-wing paramilitary organization (the AUC), all of which receive substantial financing from drug trafficking as well as kidnappings and extortion, and all three of which were on the State Department’s list of terrorist organizations even before September 11.

The Colombian state is, according to varying analysts, semi-democratic or semi-collapsed. In response to the crisis, the current U.S. administration is making Colombia a focal point of its Latin American policy and the third largest recipient of U.S. military aid. In this course we examine the current crisis and its antecedents in detail, the U.S. response to it, and broader U.S.-Colombian relations. In an effort to gain an important comparative perspective, we also will examine the experiences of other countries in the region with insurgency and paramilitary movements, refugee and internal displacement crises, narcotics trafficking, and relations with the United States. This will be a writing-intensive, seminar-style course.

The Political Economy of Latin America (3-0-3) Hagopian
This course analyzes the political bases of the developmental and distributive strategies pursued by several Latin American countries in the postwar period and the relationship between economic crises in the region and political change. It explicitly examines the relationship between regime type and economic policies and performance.

German Politics (3-0-3) Kommers
This course examines various aspects of German government and politics, including the party system, elections and voting, patterns of political participation, civil liberties, policymaking institutions, and foreign policy. The course also deals with the historical debates over Germany’s past and current attempts to come to terms with it. It also focuses on Germany’s constitutional order together with the political and societal problems arising out of Germany’s reunification.

Social Transformations and Democratic Chile (3-0-3) Crosslisted with the Department of History. See History or SOC 491 for description.

The Enlightenment and Its Revolutions (3-0-3) Hunt
This course explores the enduring significance of the Enlightenment and its many revolutions: the scientific revolutions (Bacon, Newton), the philosophical and theological revolutions (Descartes, Voltaire, Hume, Kant), and the social revolutions in the family and civil society (Wollstonecraft, Smith). We will examine the legacy, both good and bad, of these Enlightenment revolutions for contemporary American liberalism.
371. Politics, Poetry, and Philosophy in Ancient Greece
(3-0-3) C. Zuckert
Democratic politics and philosophical investigations of nature—two distinctive components of Western civilization—were invented in ancient Greece. How and why did these distinctive forms of human activity arise? Are they essentially related to one another? If so, how? To answer these questions, in this course we will first read the celebration of replacement of military monarchy by the rule of law, based on popular consent in the tragedy of human activity arise? Are they essentially related to the sometimes harsh necessities of political order and the more “imperialistic” description of political necessity he gives in his History of the Peloponnesian War. Aristophanes opposed the politics of war with comedies advocating the pleasure of peace. He introduced a new element into the discussion of the requirements and most desirable form of politics, moreover, by attacking Socratic philosophy as a corrupting force. In the second half of the course, we will, therefore, examine Plato’s response to Aristophanes’ critique in his Apology of Socrates and Symposium as well as Plato’s somewhat comic response to Aristotle’s attempt to formulate a comprehensive science of politics in the Politics. In all cases, we will be asking whether and to what extent the things these ancient authors say about political life still hold true for us.

372. Early Modern Political Theory
(3-0-3) M. Zuckert
An examination of the development of modern political theory from Machiavelli to Rousseau, focusing on Renaissance and Reformation individualism, emergence of national sovereignty (Bodin), variants of social contract theory (Hobbes, Locke, Rousseau), and Enlightenment ideas (Voltaire, Diderot).

373. Republicanism and the Origins of American Liberalism
(3-0-3) Hunt
This course traces the evolution of republican political theory, from the ancient Greeks and Romans to the Italian and Northern European Renaissance to the British and French Enlightenments, and explores the legacy of republicanism for the American constitutional tradition. Readings may include Plato, Aristotle, Polybius, Cicero, Contarini, Machiavelli, Savonarola, Calvin, Milton, Locke, Montesquieu, Rousseau, Jefferson, Madison, Mill, Rawls, and Arendt.

374. American Political Thought
(3-0-3) M. Zuckert
A selective survey of classic works and thinkers in the American political tradition. Themes and readings will vary from time to time, but texts such as the Puritan writings on politics, the Federalist and Anti-Federalist writings on the Constitution, the writings of Thomas Jefferson, James Fenimore Cooper, Abraham Lincoln, Walt Whitman, Frederick Douglass, Herbert Croly, Reinhold Niebuhr, John Courtney Murray and Martin Luther King are among the materials to be studied.

375. 19th-Century Political Thought
(3-0-3) Kaplan
This course surveys the works and themes of selected 19th-century political theorists, including Joseph de Maistre, Auguste Comte, Alexis de Tocqueville, G.W.F. Hegel, and Karl Marx. The course focuses on the role of theory in the aftermath of the French Revolution. The goal of the course is to understand the characteristic concerns and approaches of 19th-century political theory and to consider the relevance of those concerns and approaches today.

376. Contemporary Liberal Theory
(3-0-3) Zuckert
Ever since the publication of John Rawls’ A Theory of Justice in 1971, liberal political theory has experienced a great revival and now is a flourishing enterprise. This course will take Rawls as its point of departure and survey the state of current liberal political philosophy, considering such thinkers as Ronald Dworkin, Joseph Raz, Richard Rorty, and Robert Nozick.

377. Non-Western Political Thought
(3-0-3) Dallmayr
The course offers an introduction to prominent modes of non-Western thought, such as Islam, Hinduism, Buddhism, and Confucianism, with a focus on the political implications of these traditions. In each case, attention will be given both to classical and to modern texts and developments. Among classical sources, consideration will be given to Al-Farabi, Averroes, Ibn Khaldun, the Vedas, Upanishads, some Buddhist Sutras, and the Analects among modern or recent developments the focus will be on Islamic “fundamentalism” and secularism, on Gandhi and Indian nationalism, and on “engaged Buddhism” and Chinese communism.

378. War and Peace
(3-0-3) C. Zuckert
From the time political associations arose in ancient Greece, thoughtful observers have asked why the people within such societies and also the polities themselves seem always to come into conflict. Are such conflicts inevitable? Are they necessarily violent? Or can conflict be controlled, if not resolved peacefully? In this course, we will read a variety of different attempts to answer these questions in classic works of political theory by Thucydides, Machiavelli, Hobbes, Grotius, Montesquieu, and Kant.

379. The Enlightenment Political Novel
(3-0-3) Hunt
This course will investigate the place of the novel in Enlightenment political theory. Authors such as Daniel Defoe (Robinson Crusoe) used the novel to express radical new moral and political ideas that deeply influenced later Enlightenment political theorists. Many of the great political theorists of the Enlightenment also used the novel alongside the philosophical treatise to express their innovative moral and political ideas. Enlightenment thinkers often have been narrowly construed as arch-rationalists and idealists who were inattentive to the role of the passions and human relationships in morality and politics. The political novels of Swift, Montesquieu, Rousseau, Voltaire, Wollstonecraft, and Godwin break down this inaccurate caricature of Enlightenment political theory. We will read the political novels of these thinkers alongside selections from their philosophical and political essays and treatises and examine how their novels both expound and reinterpret their “enlightened” ideas on rights, liberty, moral and civil laws, manners and mores, social and economic inequality, political justice, love, family, and the good life. Readings may include Robinson Crusoe; Gulliver’s Travels; The Persian Letters; Emilie, Julie or the New Heloise; Candide; Mary, A Fiction; Maria, or the Wrongs of Woman; and Caleb Williams.

471. Justice Seminar
(3-0-3) Roos
An examination of major theories of justice, both ancient and modern. Readings include representatives of liberal theorists of right, such as John Rawls, as well as perfectionist alternatives. The course also serves as the core seminar for the philosophy, politics and economics concentration.
475. Contemporary Political Theory
(3-0-3) Dallmayr
An introduction to contemporary political philosophy as articulated both by American and European thinkers. The main aim of the course is to investigate whether our century makes room for genuine political thought. Among those discussed are Leo Strauss, Michael Oakeshott, Eric Voegelin, Hannah Arendt, John Rawls, and Jürgen Habermas.

476. Continental Political Theory
(3-0-3) Dallmayr
This course offers an introduction to the social and political thought of leading representatives of Continental philosophy in the 20th century. After exploring the work of the main “founders” of phenomenology and existentialism (Husserl, Heidegger, Jaspers), the course will concentrate chiefly on the “French school” of existentialism and existential phenomenology (Marcel, Camus, Sartre, Merleau-Ponty and Ricoeur). The course will conclude with some reflections on contemporary post-phenomenology and deconstruction (Foucault, Derrida).

495V. Mock Trial
(3-0-3) Dwyer
Permission required.
This course is designed to prepare students to participate in the American Mock Trial Association annual mock trial tournaments. Students will learn to apply the judicial rules of civil/criminal procedure and rules of evidence to the 2002-03 national case. Participants will assume the roles of trial attorneys and witnesses for the plaintiff and defense and will develop critical analytical and communications skills in preparing and presenting the case through the direct examination and cross examination at trial.

491/492. Writing Seminars
These intensive writing seminars are required courses. Open to senior majors and second-semester junior Pi Sigma Alpha members with permission of the director of undergraduate studies. The Writing Seminars give seniors the opportunity to work in a seminar setting, to explore a topic more deeply, and to gain experience writing in their field. Recent topics have included: Issue Politics, the Constitution and Public Policy, Constitutional Rights, African Politics, Israeli Politics, Issues in Democratic Politics, Latin American Politics, The Problem of the Common Good, Women and Politics, Non-Western Political Thought, Politics and Literature, and The Politics of Cultural Differences.

496. Internships
(3-0-3) Arroyo
The goal of the internship program is to provide opportunities to integrate coursework with experiential learning. To this end we sponsor internships through the Notre Dame area with a variety of local government or government-related agencies. Learning through internships encompasses polishing your resume, honing your interviewing skills, and improving writing and analytical skills by entering the world of work and getting hands-on experience. All internships are nonpaid. Internship credits do not fulfill the political science major requirements. Permission required.

497. Directed Readings: Reading and Research
(0-V-0) Staff
Students with a G.P.A. at the Dean’s list level are eligible for independent study under the direction of a faculty member. Registration requires a “contractual agreement” with professor prior to scheduling.

499. Senior Honors Thesis
(0-V-3) Staff
Seniors with a grade point average of 3.5 or above are encouraged to write a senior honors thesis. For this project, the student works closely with a faculty member on a topic of the student’s choice. The senior honors thesis builds on the student’s coursework, experience, and interests and trains the student to work deeply and independently. Three credits of this two-semester project fulfill one senior writing seminar requirement. The other three credits can count toward elective credit but not toward the major.

500-Level Courses. Many 500-level graduate courses are open to qualified undergraduates with a grade point average of 3.6 or higher and permission of the instructor. Descriptions of these courses are available in the Graduate School Bulletin of Information, as well as in the political science department office.

Program of Studies. The Program of Liberal Studies, Notre Dame’s Great Books program, offers an integrated three-year sequence of studies leading to the bachelor of arts degree. Students enter the program at the end of the First Year of Studies.

Fundamental to the program is a conception of a liberal arts education that aims to avoid the separation of the humanities and sciences. The program seeks to provide a unified undergraduate education in all of the liberal arts. For this reason the program is not to be equated with a “general humanities” educational program. The study of literature, philosophy, natural and social science, theology, history and fine arts will take place within a larger unifying conception of the liberal arts that cuts across many of the disciplinary boundaries suggested by these names. Because the goal of the program education is more than an introduction to various subject matters, none of the tutorials or seminars stands alone in the program. The curriculum grows organically over the three years, with each course presuming all of its predecessors.

Although the program emphasizes education in the liberal arts, it also considers the liberal arts to themselves as insufficient for a complete education. The liberal arts are the critical tools of learning, but they are also to be related to the larger search for genuine understanding and philosophic wisdom. Philosophy, which explores the basic questions of epistemology, ethics, and politics, is also related to the claims of the Christian tradition. The program maintains specific tutorials in the various disciplines to enable these relationships to develop systematically.

The normal method of instruction in the program is through the reading and discussion of primary texts. The student is asked to take an active role in the learning process. Particularly in the seminar, the authors of the great books are considered to be the primary teachers.
The program requires writing throughout the curriculum, especially in the tutorial classes. In the spring semester of their senior year, all students are required to write a major research essay under the direction of a faculty advisor. The senior essay offers students a particularly intensive writing experience and an opportunity to investigate a specialized topic of interest in depth.

To accomplish the goals of the program, the student must take the entire sequence of courses, each building upon the earlier components to achieve a cumulative and organic educational experience. For this reason, the program must constitute the student’s major. Sufficient electives are available in each of the three years, however, to allow outside concentrations to be completed. Supplementary majors are difficult but not impossible and can be accommodated.

Students must formally apply for entrance into the program at a stated date in the spring of the first year, and application blanks will be available by mid-January. Students interested in entering the program are urged to complete the University science, mathematics, and first theology requirement in the first year. In some special cases, typically involving international study, a student may begin the program at a later date, but in no case after the beginning of the junior year. Students admitted to the program at later stages must be prepared to make up prior components.

Course Descriptions. The following course descriptions give the number and title of each course. Lecture hours per week, laboratory and/or tutorial hours per week and credits each semester are in parentheses. The instructor’s name is also included.

Literature

243. Literature I: Poetic Diction

(3-0-3) Fallon, Marvin

An introduction to poetry through intensive study of several lyric poets writing in English. Through close reading of selected works in English, students will become familiar with central literary devices, including rhythm and meter, image, metaphor, symbol, paradox and irony. Authors may include Shakespeare, Herbert, Marvell, Wordsworth, Yeats, and Eliot. Fall.

346. Literature II: The Longer Forms

(4-0-4) (4-0-4) Staff

The second seminar sequence deals with the primary works of the High Middle Ages, the Renaissance, and early modern authors through the Enlightenment. Authors treated include Thomas Aquinas, Dante, Chaucer, Luther, Cervantes, Bacon, Descartes, Hobbes, Pascal, Milton, Hume, Rousseau, Swift, Austen, Kant, and Goethe.

381-382. Great Books Seminar III and IV

(4-0-4) (4-0-4) Staff

The third sequence deals with 19th- and 20th-century works, including some consideration of the primary works of the Eastern tradition. Authors treated include selected writings of Chinese and Hindu authors, Hegel, Tocqueville, Melville, Tolstoy, Mill, Marx, Kierkegaard, Newman, Darwin, Nietzsche, Freud, Peirce, James, Heidegger, Woolf, Wittgenstein, Eliot, and Dostoevsky.

Philosophy and Theology

241. Philosophical Inquiry

(3-0-3) Reydams-Schils, Staff

Exercises in philosophical inquiry in the context of the liberal arts tradition, including a study of both classical and modern texts and an introduction to the forms of logical argument. Fall.

246. The Bible and Its Interpretations

(3-0-3) Ayo

A close study of the Bible. Selected passages will be analyzed in detail. The course will consider the role of the Bible in the life of the church, the history of its interpretation and the various approaches of modern scholarship. Spring.
347. Ethics
(3-0-3) Affeldt
An examination of modes of moral reasoning and what constitutes the good life, based primarily on the study of the ethical teachings of some of the main philosophers and theologians of the Western tradition. Readings will include Aristotle and Kant and a selection from such authors as Augustine, Rousseau, and Mill and from works on moral development. Fall.

348. Political and Constitutional Theory: Ancient and Modern
(3-0-3) Affeldt, Nicgorski
An approach to understanding the fundamental problems of political community and the nature of various solutions to these, especially the democratic solution. Readings include Aristotle's Politics, Locke's Second Treatise, and The Federalist. Spring.

443. Christian Theological Tradition
(3-0-3) Ayo, Emery
A study of the major Christian doctrines in their development, including God, creation and humanity, incarnation and redemption, and the sacraments. The course moves toward a historical and systematic understanding of Christianity, specifically the Roman Catholic tradition. Readings typically include patristic authors, medieval authors such as Aquinas, and the documents of Vatican II. Fall.

444. Metaphysics and Epistemology
(3-0-3) Munzel, Reydams-Schils
An inquiry into the nature of knowledge and reality, and their relation, based on close study of select writings of Plato, Aristotle, Aquinas, Kant, Arendt and others. Spring.

244. Mathematical Sciences and Classical Astronomy
(3-0-3) Bordogna, Sloan
Drawing on a great-books approach to science through use of classic texts, the science tutorial courses constitute a distinctive attempt to understand the main principles and developments in the sciences and mathematics that have most dramatically influenced humanity’s view of itself and its universe through the study of select primary sources. Laboratory and observatory experience will be incorporated to bring students into direct contact with the critical scientific observations and experiments. The first half of the first natural science course explores the nature of mathematical reasoning, primarily by the study of Euclidean geometry. The second half, focused on a study of the Copernican revolution, begins with readings from Aristotle, Plato and Prolemy, followed by a selective study of the new theories of Copernicus, Kepler and Galileo. Spring.

343. Mechanics/Life Sciences
(3-0-3) Sloan
This course is divided into halves. The first half studies the development of mechanics by a consideration of the contributions of such authors as Aristotle, Descartes, Galileo, Newton and Einstein. The second unit concentrates on the sciences of living nature, exploring this first through a case study of the development of Harvey’s theory of the circulation of the blood, with readings from Galen, Harvey and Descartes. This will be followed by the analysis of Darwin’s theory of evolution and the Darwin debates, concentrating on a reading of The Origin of Species and related texts. Fall.

446. Modern Astronomy/Developmental Psychology
(3-0-3) Crowe, Power
This semester will be composed of two half-semester units. One will deal with the development of stellar and extra-galactic astronomy. Writings under consideration will include works by Herschel, Shapley, and Hubble. The second unit will examine modern social science. The focus of this unit will be on the cognitive developmental psychology of Jean Piaget with supplementary readings from John Dewey, Lawrence Kohlberg and Stanley Milgram. Spring.

The undergraduate courses are intended to meet the needs of students who plan to (1) major in psychology and later attend graduate school in psychology or affiliated fields, (2) major in psychology as part of a general cultural program, (3) obtain training in psychology as a special supplement to their major interest or (4) use psychology to satisfy social science requirements or electives.

One of the department’s main features is an emphasis on opportunities for close faculty-student involvement in research projects at the undergraduate level. The research specialties in which majors may become involved range from basic research in such areas as psychophysics, human and animal learning, child development, aging and psycholinguistics, to applied research in a community setting. Students planning to do graduate work in psychology will plan their program in close coordination with their faculty advisors.

Undergraduate Major. The psychology major requires a minimum of seven three-credit courses, two four-credit courses (341 and 342) and one one-credit course (300), and, therefore, a minimum of 30 credit hours.

The specific requirements comprising the minimum 30 credit hours are as follows. All majors are required to take three credits of PSY 111, Introductory Psychology (for freshmen), or PSY 211 or 211A, Introductory Psychology (for upperclass students) as a prerequisite for the content psychology courses. In addition, all psychology majors are required to take PSY 341, Experimental Psychology I: Statistics (four credits), and PSY 342, Experimental Psychology II: Research Methods (four credits). Majors then have a choice in that they are required to complete two of the following four courses in the Social and Developmental Processes (CLASS A): PSY 350, Developmental Psychology; PSY 352, Social Psychology; PSY 353, Personality; and PSY 354, Abnormal Psychology. Similarly, majors are required to complete two of the following four courses in the Biological and Learning Processes (CLASS B): PSY 355, Physiological Psychology; PSY 356, Learning and Memory; PSY 357, Sensation and Perception; and PSY 359, Cognition. In their senior year each major must take two content courses at the 400 level, which are small, in-depth discussion-oriented seminars generally in the instructor’s specific area of expertise. All 400-level seminars are designated writing-intensive courses, satisfying the College of Arts and Letters writing requirement. (See arts and letters writing requirement, page 79.) PSY 498, Special Studies, cannot be used to satisfy the 400-level major requirement. Finally, in the spring semester following their declaration of a major in psychology, new majors are expected to participate in a one-credit-hour seminar called PSY 300, Psychology: Science, Practice, Policy, which provides an introduction to the department and the faculty.

Program of Liberal Studies

History

445. Intellectual and Cultural History
(3-0-3) Staff
This tutorial will deal with the issue of history and its location in the great-books curriculum. The first portion of the course will examine the issues of historiography and the use of historical analysis and contextualized reading. The course after this point will examine selectively critical issues in the foundations of the modern era by means of primary and secondary sources dealing with the French Revolution and its aftermath, the transformation at the end of the 18th century in philosophy, and the Industrial Revolution. The course will conclude with a select examination of issues at the end of the 19th century. Texts to be treated will include Carr, What is History; Montesquieu, The Spirit of the Laws; Rousseau, The Social Contract; Kant, What is Enlightenment and Idea of a Universal Peace; primary documents on the French Revolution; Dickens, Hard Times; Mann, The Magic Mountain; Eliade, Cosmos and History. Fall.

Special Courses

462. Essay Tutorial
(3-0-3) Staff
This course provides the framework in which seniors in the program prepare a substantial essay, culminating their three years in the program. Faculty members working with small groups of students help them define their topics and guide them, usually on a one-to-one basis, in the preparation of their essays. Spring.

497. Directed Readings
(3-0-3) Staff
Instructor’s written permission and permission of chair required. Reading courses in areas of interest to the student.
Note: PSY 398 or PSY 498, Special Studies cannot be used to satisfy any of the 300 level or 400 level courses. However, these credits are strongly recommended for any students intent on pursuing a graduate career in psychology. In addition, even though Introductory Psychology (PSY 111, PSY 211, or PSY 211A) is a prerequisite for the content area courses, it does not fulfill any of the 30-credit-hour requirements for the major.

Course Descriptions. The following course descriptions give the number and title of each course. Lecture hours per week, laboratory and/or tutorial hours per week and credits each semester are in parentheses. The instructor’s name is also included.

111. Introductory Psychology FY
(3-0-3) Venter, Radvansky, Utz
A broad coverage of the methods and findings which characterize scientific psychology, including a description of historical and recent developments in the areas of learning and motivation; perceptual, cognitive and physiological processes; social, personality and child development; and abnormal behavior and clinical treatment. Open to first-year students only.

180. Social Science University Seminar
(3-0-3) Staff
These seminars are designed for further understanding of the myriad ways psychology is embedded in the biological, social and cultural contexts of one’s everyday life.

211. Introductory Psychology SJS
(3-0-3) Corning, Staff
A broad coverage of the methods and findings which characterize scientific psychology, including a description of historical and recent developments in the areas of learning and motivation; perceptual, cognitive and physiological processes; social, personality and child development and abnormal behavior and clinical treatment. Open only to sophomores, juniors and seniors.

211A. Introductory Psychology PSI
(0-0-3) Crowell
This course covers the same content as PSY 211 but is taught using an individualized, self-paced method of instruction. This method is a variant of the Personalized System of Instruction (PSI) format and includes features such as self-paced learning, emphasis upon mastery of the written rather than the spoken word, frequent testing and an option to retake unsatisfactory quizzes.

The department requires that Introductory Psychology (PSY 111, PSY 211, or PSY 211A) precede its 300- and 400-level courses.

300. Psychology: Science, Practice, and Policy
(1-0-1) Borkowski
This one-credit seminar introduces the department’s programs and faculty research interests as well as the profession of psychology. The goal is to encourage more active reflection on how psychology can be useful, both personally and professionally; also to present the major tensions within contemporary psychology as well as its potential impact on public policies in the decade ahead.

305. Leadership, Culture, and Community
(3-0-3) Pope-Davis
This course is designed to give students exposure to some of the present day Notre Dame legends in leadership. Students will participate in discussions with Notre Dame and South Bend leaders such as athletic coaches, University administrators, presidents, deans, and faculty of various disciplines. This is a rare opportunity to discuss culture, community, and leadership issues with proven professionals, philanthropists, and prominent community figures.

During the semester students will be asked to examine issues of conflict and conflict that arise when cultural, community, and leadership styles attempt to co-exist. Potential ways of addressing these issues will be proposed and evaluated. Approximately 12 speakers from the Notre Dame and South Bend community will be invited to present their personal histories as it relates to their professional development, leadership style, culture, and communities in which they work. Speakers will also address issues of cultural differences and similarities that may lead to conflict and how they are resolved.

310A. Soc Con Sem: Children and Poverty
(1-0-1) Brandenberger
Refer to “Center for Social Concerns” in the front section of this Bulletin.

310C. Soc Con Sem: Leadership Ethics
(1-0-1) Brandenberger
Refer to “Center for Social Concerns” in the front section of this Bulletin.

341. Experimental Psychology I: Statistics
(3-2-4) Ghiaseddin, Gibson, Schuster, Venter, Wenger
An introduction to the analysis and evaluation of experimental data, with particular emphasis upon measures of central tendency, variability and covariability and their relationship to psychological theory and explanation.

342. Experimental Psychology II: Methods
(3-3-4) Bergeman, Braungart-Rieker, Carlson, West
Prerequisite: PSY 341.
A continuation of Psychology 341, with emphasis on the design and methods of execution of psychological research. Training in writing reports in professional format is also provided.
354. Abnormal Psychology (3-0-3) Smith, Staff
Defines the concept of abnormal or maladaptive behavior; reviews the principles involved in human development and adjustment and describes the common clinical syndromes, their causes and treatments.

355. Physiological Psychology (3-V-3) Crowell, Gibson
An introduction to the biological bases of behavior, with a major emphasis being placed upon the neurological correlates of behavior. May be offered with lab section.

356. Learning and Memory (3-0-3) Radvansky, West
A survey of the theories and methods relating to basic processes in learning and memory from both biological and cognitive perspectives.

357. Sensation and Perception (3-0-3) Dawson, Gibson, Wenger
Includes a diverse range of topics, from sensory processes and perceptual development to sensory deprivation and visual illusions. Emphasis is on auditory and visual perception.

358. Cognitive Psychology (3-0-3) Carlson, Eberhard, Gibson, Radvansky
A lecture course presenting a cognitive approach to higher processes such as memory, problem solving, learning, concept formation and language.

359. Practicum in Teaching Technology (3-0-3) Crowell
Prerequisite: Consent of instructor.
An introduction to and experience in applying the principles and methods of behavior instruction in the classroom.

360. Computers in Psychological Research and Education (3-0-3) Crowell
Permission of instructor required.
Possible projects include: education, work productivity, decision making, database management, expert systems, knowledge retrieval, data analysis and experiment control. Projects may require campus mainframe computer or microcomputers, particularly the Macintosh or IBM PC. Same as CAPP 481C.

390B. Practicum in Developmental Dysfunction (3-0-3) Crowell
Prerequisite: Consent of instructor.
The practicum is a logic outgrowth of a long informal relationship that student volunteers have had with families in the Michiana community who have autistic and other special-needs children. The practicum aspect of the course will involve students going into a family home and working in a structured program with an autistic child for, on average, three times a week and a total of six to seven hours. In addition, students will meet in class once a week for discussion on a range of topics relating to autism, including issues regarding its definition, assessment, etiology, and treatment, as well as topics regarding the impact of autism on the family, community resources, and social policy. A number of classes will feature discussions led by parents of autistic children. This course is recommended particularly for students interested in child clinical psychology, education, developmental psychology, and social work.

391. Marital Communication (3-0-3) Smith
This seminar begins with a review of general principles of behavior therapy as applied to marital problems. Following this, practical readings on how to improve marital functioning will be covered. The seminar will conclude with a service learning experience that involves creating and delivering a marital communication and problem-solving workshop to couples at The Robinson Community Learning Center, a Notre Dame Center for Social Concerns community agency.

392. Sign Language (3-0-3) Stillson
The American Sign Language class is designed to introduce basic vocabulary and simple sentence structure for conversational use. A cultural view is presented to examine traditions and values. A linguistic view is presented to introduce structure, syntax and manual alphabet. Experimental activities, receptive and expressive exercises and fluency opportunities are incorporated into the format. This is an introductory course for students with no prior knowledge of American sign language.

393A. Family Business
See the Mendoza College of Business section of this Bulletin for a description.

394. Culture and Community Psychology (3-0-3) Pope-Davis
Prerequisite: PSY 341.
The course will address cultural identity theory, research and practice in society, and how it affects the psychosocial development of different cultural groups. Cultural assumptions, values, and attitudes will also be examined.

397. Directed Readings (0-0-3)
Prerequisite: Consent of instructor.
Directed reading is carried out under the supervision of a faculty member. A typewritten report on the reading is required.

398. Special Studies (0-V-V) Staff
Prerequisite: Consent of instructor. Majors only.
Independent research carried out under supervision of a faculty member. A typewritten report of a research literature or an experimental study is required.

The following advanced courses and seminars are primarily for majors; however, non-majors may enroll with the consent of the instructor.

401. Motivation (3-0-3) Crowell
Overview of theory and research relation to the concept of motivation. Both historical and contemporary issues are considered.

402. Psychological Testing (3-0-3) Staff
Prerequisite: PSY 341.
An introduction to the theory of psychological measurement. The course surveys representative tests of intelligence, personality, attitudes, interests and aptitudes.

405. Children and Poverty: Developmental Implications (3-0-3) Brandenberger
Examines the impact of rising levels of child poverty and related concerns from the perspective of developmental and social psychology.

406. Learning for Change: Alternative Pedagogies and Moral Imagination (3-0-3) Brandenberger
Exploration of broad issues relating education and the common good with an emphasis on the pedagogical practices promoting moral development and moral imagination.

407. Leadership and Social Responsibility (3-0-3) Brandenberger
This course examines leadership and empowerment issues from multidisciplinary perspectives, focusing on the role of the leader within organizations that promote service, social action or other forms of social responsibility. Alternative models of leadership are explored, with attention to value and moral implications.
408. Cross-Cultural Psychology
(3-0-3) Pope-Davis
The general purpose of this course is to examine and learn to talk about issues of culture and race in the United States from a psycho-social perspective. Culture and race are not synonyms. So, we will be examining some of the ways that each affects the quality of our psychological functioning.

The goals of this course are to learn to recognize and appreciate culture in ourselves and others; to examine the different ways that cultural and racial socialization influence behavior, to consider how culture and race relate to various psychological constructs, and to understand the ways in which racism and ethnocentrism operates in everyday life. To accomplish these goals, we will use readings, group discussions, lectures, films, and each other to expand our awareness of how culture and race operate in our everyday life. As a student in this class, you will be encouraged to share your ideas and life experiences.

410. Psychology of Discrimination
(3-0-3) Corning
This course is intended to facilitate students’ understanding of discrimination and prejudice from a social-psychological perspective. The psychologically-based causes, correlates, and consequences of discrimination and prejudice will be examined via the application of social-cognitive theories and research to the real experiences of stigmatized group members. As such, this course is intended to help students better understand the major psychological principles underlying prejudiced attitudes and discriminatory behavior; become acquainted with current research on the causes, correlates, and consequences of prejudice and discrimination; and engage in more objective examination of one’s own attitudes and behaviors.

420. Teaching and the Development of Thought
(3-0-3) Day
An examination of current research in cognition and instruction. The focus is on how cognitive processes can be enhanced through education. Also included are readings and discussions on how individual differences, such as special aptitudes, may influence learning in the classroom.

421. Infancy and Early Childhood
(3-0-3) Braungart-Rieker
This seminar is designed for advanced students who are interested in developmental psychology, particularly the period of infancy and early childhood. The course focuses on major theories and empirical research on developmental processes during infancy and early childhood.

422. Human Resiliency
(3-0-3) Whitman
As part of being alive, human beings confront routine stressors, major life challenges and severe traumas. Individuals vary considerably in their ability to cope with such events. This course examines a range of stressors (e.g., adolescence, school and job "failure," divorce, parenting, chronic illness and disabilities, aging, death, poverty, prejudice, child abuse, and war) and how people manage them. Particular emphasis will be placed on examining why some individuals develop serious problems such as depression when challenged and others are resilient, that is, able to meet life's challenges and grow stronger. Theoretical (e.g., biological, psychoanalytic, humanistic, existential and behavioral) perspectives on resiliency are evaluated along with relevant empirical research. Fictional and nonfictional examples of resilient individuals are examined. An important focus of the course is on thinking about how resiliency can be fostered through parenting, education, therapy and social policy. Specific techniques for managing routine and exceptional stressors will be discussed. The course is especially recommended for students interested in clinical, counseling, educational and developmental psychology.

423. Cognitive Processes in Children
(3-0-3) Day
Concentrated introduction to cognition focusing on the development of intelligence. Primary emphasis will be given to the developmental psychology of Piaget, followed by reviews of other selected theories for comparison.

424. Seminar in Sensory Processes and Psychophysics
(3-0-3) Dawson
An in-depth look at the major human sense involving their physical, physiological, and psychological aspects. It covers specification, description, and measures of the relevant physical stimuli, physiological mechanisms, as well as the various psychological or sensory results that occur in sensation. Also covered will be the various psychophysical methods that have been and are used to assess sensory function. These include measures of absolute and differential sensitivity plus methods of psycho-physical scaling.

427. Formal Representations of Psychological Hypotheses I
(3-0-3) Wenger
This course serves as an introduction to methods for representing hypotheses regarding psychological processes and phenomena as mathematical and/or computational models. Emphasis is placed on stochastic models, and analytic and computational tools for constructing and exploring such models, in the context of particular psychological phenomena, will be introduced. Issues of model identifiability and testability will be emphasized. Students will be responsible for constructing and exploring the predictions of a formal representation of a hypothesis in their own area of expertise or interest.

431. Health Psychology
(3-0-3) Merluzzi
An overview of health psychology and behavioral medicine, with the following topics: psychology and medicine, health psychology models, stress and health, adaptation to illness, psychological aspects of some severe illnesses, and professional opportunities.

452. Moral and Spiritual Development
(3-0-3) Narvaez
As an introductory course to the field of moral psychology, we examine major research traditions. We study the theoretical underpinnings, goals, and practices of major approaches to moral education.

453. Behavioral Pediatrics
(3-0-3) Whitman, Kohlberg
This course is directed toward premedical students interested in pediatric medicine and psychology majors interested in health psychology. It exposes areas of psychology, biology and medicine pertinent to children. Specific emphasis is placed on studying infants who are at risk for developmental problems.

453A. Psychology and Medicine
(3-0-3) Kolberg
This course has two basic objectives. First, it examines topics from a life-span and psychobiological perspective by identifying factors that place individuals at different stages of life at risk for illness and assist them in maintaining their health. In addition, it addresses a variety of challenging psychological and social issues that physicians and other healthcare professionals must face in the practice of medicine. The course covers a range of topics dealing with health issues related to different stages of human development (childhood, adolescence, and adulthood), disabled populations, culture and gender, stress, physician-patient interactions, death and dying, professional ethics, and social policies relating to health care. The course is primarily intended for students intending to enter medical school.

Most classes will involve brief formal presentations by the instructors and invited guests, followed by discussion of assigned readings pertinent to the day's topic. In addition, students will be exposed, via a limited practicum, to a variety of medical settings.
454. Behavior Therapy
(3-0-3) Whitman
Prerequisite: PSY 356 recommended.
Introduction to the wide array of learning and cognitive theory-based technologies and their application in psychiatric, special education, regular education and home environments. Reviews research evaluating this approach to changing human behavior and the ethical implications of human control procedures.

455. Adulthood and Aging
(3-0-3) Bergeman
Prerequisite: PSY 342 strongly recommended.
A study of change from young adulthood to old age, the course covers a broad range of topics, including demographic information, biological, social and cognitive changes, mental illness and death and dying.

456. Mental Health and Aging
(3-0-3) Bergeman
An introduction to the mental health problems of the elderly. Etiologies of mental health disorders as well as therapeutic interventions will be discussed.

457. Behavioral Genetics
(3-0-3) Bergeman
An introduction to the principles necessary to understand genetic and environmental influences on development, with an overview of the methods and research.

458. Social Support Across the Lifespan
(3-0-3) Bergeman
A focus on research in social support, including the way social support is measured, the relationship with developmental outcomes such as physical and mental health, and the use of social support strategies as an intervention technique.

461. History and Systems of Psychology
(3-0-3) Dawson, Meara, Radvansky
Traces the development of contemporary psychology from its early philosophical origins to the present. An emphasis is placed on the era of modern psychology (mid-1800s to the present) with considerable discussion of current issues and movements.

462. Psychological Disorders of Childhood and Adolescence
(3-0-3) Staff
An overview of the major dysfunctions within the context of normal development, the basic theories seeking to explain these dysfunctions, together with a review and a critique of the empirical approaches to assessment and treatment of them.

464. Children/Families in Conflict
(3-0-3) Cummings
Current trends and findings pertaining to constructive and destructive conflict within families, and the effects of conflicts within families on children, will be considered. A focus will be on interrelations between family systems (marital, parent-child and sibling), and methodologies for studying these questions. A particular concern will be how positive and negative conflict processes in the marital relationship affects families, marriages and children. The role of interparental conflict in various family contexts (divorce, parental depression, violence and abuse, custody, physical illness or disability), and relations between family and community conflict and violence, will be examined. The positive side of family conflict will be considered, including the elements of constructive marital and family conflict, and psycho-educational strategies for promoting constructive conflict processes within families. Theories and models for conceptualizing the effects from a family-wide perspective will also be considered.

465. Seminar in Counseling Theories
(3-0-3) Kelly
This seminar will address the following questions: Does counseling work? If so, how does counseling help people reduce their symptoms of depression, anxiety and other types of problems? We will discuss several of the key traditional and nontraditional theories of counseling and show how these theories are applied to clients’ problems.

466. Professional Psychology: Methods and Practice
(3-0-3) Staff
Students will be introduced to the key research methods, empirical findings, and theories from the clinical/counseling psychology literature. Prospects for developing and testing new theories of psychotherapy will be discussed. Students will be encouraged to begin forming concepts for research projects and developing their own integrated theoretical approaches to treating clients.

469. Interpersonal Communication Skills
(3-0-3) Corning
Prerequisite: Consent of instructor.
The Human Relations Training Program provides instruction and experience in developing effective communication and basic helping skills. Attending, empathy, respect, immediacy, self-disclosure and self-exploration are studied and practiced in small-group format. Open only to juniors and seniors.
470. Seminar: Developmental Psychology
(3-0-3) Day
Introductory lectures followed by reading and discussion of selected topics in the area of developmental psychology.

470B. Infant Development and Dysfunction
(3-0-3) Whitman
Addresses physical, emotional, cognitive and social factors that influence infant development, particularly as disruptions in those factors place infants at risk for developmental problems.

470C. Adolescent Development
(3-0-3) Gondoli
Focuses on adolescent development within various social contexts, including family, peer groups and the workplace. Special emphasis on normative development at the transition from childhood to adolescence.

471. Infant and Child Development
(3-0-3) Braungart-Rieker
This course focuses on physical, cognitive, and socio-emotional development during infancy and childhood. Readings will include a textbook and several articles. Topics for reading and discussion include methods for studying infants and young children, prenatal development, cognitive processes, language development, emotional processes, parent-child relationships, and peer relationships.

474. The Neuropsychology of Consciousness
(3-0-3) Gibson
Considers the extent to which perception, personality and various states of consciousness (e.g., dreams) are due to the brain’s anatomy and physiology.

474A. Language and Space
(3-0-3) Carlson
Presents the theoretical work of psycholinguists and cognitive psychologists to address the issue of “how we talk about what we see.”

474C. Cognitive Science
(3-0-3) Eberhard
Explores an interdisciplinary approach to answering questions about the nature of the human mind and its relation to the brain.

475. Seminar: Psycholinguistics
(3-0-3) Eberhard
An interdisciplinary seminar with emphasis upon student participation covering topics such as linguistics, memory and perception for language stimuli, child language, bilingualism and social psychology of language.

476E. Psychology of Sports
(3-0-3) Franco
Social, psychological and personological approaches to issues of sports and athletic performance.

477. Seminar: Sensation and Perception
(3-0-3) Dawson
Introductory lectures followed by reading and discussion of selected topics in the area of sensation and perception.

477A. Perception and Attention
(3-0-3) Gibson
Surveys variety of issues in visual perception and attention, including consequences of visual attention, motion perception, object recognition, mental imagery and visual creativity.

478. Seminar: Social Psychology
(3-0-3) Staff
Introductory lectures followed by reading and discussion of selected topics in the area of social psychology.

478A. Stereotyping: A Social Psychological Approach
(3-0-3) Staff
Seminar exploring the cognitive and motivational biases underlying the formation, maintenance and utilization of stereotypes.

478C. Attitudes and Persuasion
(3-0-3) Staff
Discussion of both classic and contemporary theories in the area of attitudes and attitude change, with an emphasis on applying the principles and techniques of persuasion to marketing.

479. Seminar: Theory and Research in Aging
(3-0-3) Staff
Prerequisite: Some previous coursework in aging desired but not essential. A research-oriented seminar discussing current investigations, methodologies and theory in the study of adult aging. An emphasis is placed on the current issues and research possibilities in geropsychology.

480. Seminar: Motivation
(3-0-3) Staff
Introductory lectures followed by reading and discussion of selected topics, research and current issues in motivation.

480A. Motivation and Academic Learning
(3-0-3) Turner
Traditional studies of learning have focused almost exclusively on cognitive, or “cold,” processes. Recent research on learning illustrates how “hot” processes also influence thinking and academic learning. In this course, we focus on how social, motivational, and emotional influences interact with cognitive processes to affect academic learning. Social influences will include students’ social goals in school, friendships, and family dynamics. Motivational influences are explored through the study of major theories of achievement motivation, including attribution, self-efficacy, intrinsic motivation, “possible selves,” and goal theories. Emotional factors such as coping mechanisms, test anxiety, and well-being also are discussed. In addition, we explore how development affects students’ social, motivational, and emotional responses to learning. Child, adolescent, and adult models are discussed, and applications to educational child settings will be an integral part of the course.

480B. Implications of Psychology for Education
(3-0-3) Turner
Examines the manner in which cognitive and developmental psychology can inform educational practice, especially instruction.

480C. Research In Educational Psychology
(3-0-3) Presley
This course develops the understanding of a range of basic and applied educational psychology research and research design and analytic strategies.

481. Seminar: Personality and Psychology
(3-0-3) Merluzzi
Introductory lectures followed by reading and discussion of selected topics in the area of personality and abnormal psychology.

482. Seminar: Memory
(3-0-3) Staff
Introductory lectures followed by reading and discussion of selected topics in the area of memory.

483. Seminar: Psychobiology
(3-0-3) Staff
Introductory lectures followed by reading and discussion of selected topics in the area of psychobiology.

483A. Developmental Psychobiology
(3-0-3) Kolberg
Historical overview and current research on selected topics in developmental psychobiology. Explores possible societal benefits of research combining psychology and biology in the areas of medicine, mental health and education.
483C. Philosophy and Psychiatry (3-0-3)
Mental illness is something we experience subjectively, socially construct and attempt to understand through various scientific or therapeutic models (the psychodynamic, the biomedical, etc.). The course juxtaposes these perspectives for the sake of exploring the possibilities of both integrating them and highlighting the resources they offer for mutual criticism.

We begin with the assumption we can learn something about mental illness by examining the various sorts of stories told about it. We do not judge a memoir of madness in the same way as we would the clinical case history of the same patient. Careful collaborative reading and class discussion of two first person accounts of mental disorder serves two purposes. It provides students with a shared acquaintance with concrete descriptions of mental illness and also provokes such questions as: In psychiatry, is the true story simply the one that enables the patient to “recover”? What do we mean by terms like “recovery” and “mental health”? How are these terms related to ethical and political norms relating to “human flourishing,” “honesty,” or “authenticity”? These issues require an introduction to literary, anthropological, and philosophical criticism of the social construction of mental illness.

Then we take a look at a fresh and psychiatrically meaningful approach to the classic mind/body problem: examination of the links between the conceptual frameworks underlying psychoanalytic and biomedical approaches to psychiatry.

We will take an extended and careful look at philosopher/pyschiatrist Jonathan Lear’s effort to locate the psychoanalytic perspectives of Freud and Loewald within a putatively more hospitable Aristotelian philosophical framework, thereby cleansing Freud’s approach from the extraneous baggage of late 19th century scientism (determinism, reductionism, speculative biology). Lear uses Aristotle and Wittgenstein to dissolve the traditional mind/body problem and to critically reconstitute a “science of subjectivity” around the notion that enrs is a basic force of nature.

A select subset of Lear’s version of the conceptual foundations of psychoanalysis, particularly his critique of “knowingness” and his interpretations of transference and of “restlessness, phantasy, and the concept of mind,” will be compared with closely related biopsychological models of memory, attachment, temperament and response to trauma.

Assignments and format: One or two longer papers on topics chosen by student in consultation with instructor (multiple drafts recommended). Two take-home examinations, including the final. Interactive critical discussion of short papers on assigned reading.

483E. Stress: Med and Management (3-0-3) Kolberg
This course is concerned with stress, its effect, and coping mechanisms from a biological as well as a psychological viewpoint.
1. We explore the nature of stress itself. What exactly is stress? How do issues of control and personality enter into the perception of stress? Can we have physiological stress without the perception of stress? We examine some special types of stress such as long-term or serious illness and work-related stress.
2. We cover the stress response and the effect of this response on the level of the whole organism (fatigue, irritability, insomnia, cognitive difficulties, etc.).
3. We examine the link between stress and disease on the level of organ systems such as the cardiovascular system, the immune system, the gastrointestinal system, and the endocrine system.
4. We examine the biological and psychological basis of common coping mechanisms such as cognitive therapy, social support, drug therapy (self-prescribed and physician-prescribed), alcohol, exercise, meditation, and sleep. The major aim is to understand the mechanism, evaluate the efficacy in alleviating the stress response, and any potentially harmful effects.
5. We examine theory and practices of mobilizing support in stressful circumstances.

Class performance will be based on two examinations, one term paper (approximately 15-10 pages), and classroom participation. Students also will keep a stress and health diary.

485C. Autism (3-0-3) Whitman
This seminar discusses topics related to developmental disabilities, with a special emphasis on pervasive developmental disorders and autism. Issues regarding their definition, etiology and treatment are also discussed.

487A. Race Talk (3-0-3) Day
The central goal of this course is to encourage students to understand and challenge their own and others’ views about issues of race and ethnicity.

488A. The Environment: Science, Culture, Values (3-0-3) Howard
Examines ecological problems from various perspectives (biological, historical, ethical, economic, etc.) through a series of guest lectures. Highlights importance of cross-disciplinary cooperation in solving complex ecological problems.

488C. Living Healthy Lives (3-0-3) Howard
Didactic material and experimental activities pertinent to daily living, particularly to normal crises and transition stages. Topics include marriage, divorce, career changes, childbirth, retirement; the resources available at crisis points, such as therapy, pastoral support, community agencies, etc.; some common behavioral problems, like substance abuse, depression and stress; and related topics.

495. Practicum in Diversity Education (3-0-3) Howard
This is a one-credit course designed to instruct students in the theory of diversity education while training them in the art of facilitating diversity discussions. The theoretical framework for the material in the course comes from the "theory of oppression" and the various individual, institutional, cultural, and systemic manifestations of that oppression. The application portion of this course entails the presentation of diversity programs in a required course (Concepts of Wellness) for first-year students. The structure of the Practicum in Diversity Education course includes theory instruction/training before the semester break and making presentations/facilitating diversity discussions for the remaining portion of the semester.

496. Special Studies: Reading and Research (0-V-V) Staff
Prerequisite: Senior standing and permission of instructor. Majors only. Independent reading and/or research carried out under supervision of a faculty member. A typewritten report is required discussing research literature or an experimental study. This course may not be used to satisfy the 400-level requirement.

499. Senior Honors Thesis (3-0-3) (3-0-3) Merluzzi
These two seminars assist the senior major to propose, execute and write an honors thesis. The first semester is devoted to the development and presentation of the proposal, and the second to its execution, writeup and subsequent presentation.

PSYCHOLOGY
Program of Studies. The Romance languages derive from Vulgar Latin spoken throughout the Roman Empire. A major course of study is offered in French, Italian and Spanish. The study of foreign languages, literatures, and cultures provides educational opportunities relevant to an increasingly interdependent world. The acquisition of foreign-language skills is a crucial component of liberal education because it enhances our powers of communication and serves to introduce us to the enduring cultural achievements of other peoples. Such study is essential to broaden our mental horizons, to encourage the examination of problems and issues in a more global manner and to stimulate our understanding of the traditions of other nations.

Elementary and intermediate courses develop the students’ ability to understand, speak, read and write a foreign language with facility and confidence. Students can take advantage of the latest in foreign language technology in the Language Resource Center to increase their fluency in the target language. Upper-division courses present a wealth of literary, historical, and cultural traditions and emphasize the nature and development of national cultures. Many courses focus on the literature and culture of certain historical periods, others trace the development of literary genres or examine a theme across periods and genres, and still others investigate the critical and analytical skills necessary for an informed interpretation of foreign language texts.

Participation in Notre Dame’s international study programs in Chile, France, Italy, Mexico, and Spain (see the International Study Programs section of this Bulletin) is highly recommended although not required to pursue a major in Romance Languages and Literatures. Majors and second majors in French, Italian, and Spanish must complete 50 percent of their credit hours in the major in residency at Notre Dame and meet the following program requirements.

PROGRAM IN FRENCH AND FRANCOPHONE STUDIES

The Major in French and Francophone Studies

The requirements for a major in French and Francophone Studies include competency in the language and successful completion of 30 credit hours or 10 courses at the 200 level or above. Of these 10 courses, six must be in literature/culture studies and at least half must be in residence at Notre Dame. Required among these 10 courses are: ROFR 310 (Textual Analysis), ROFR 371 (French Literary Survey I), ROFR 372 (French Literary Survey II), and at least two courses at the 400 level, one of which would be a Senior Seminar (ROFR 495). It is expected that these five required courses be taken in residence at Notre Dame. The requirement of ROFR 372 (French Literary Survey II) may be waived if students take both ROFR 373 and ROFR 374 in Angers—that is, two advanced courses on 19th- and 20th-century French literature. Any other substitution will require the approval of the Undergraduate Studies Advisor. AP credits satisfy the language requirement only and may not be applied to the major.

The Supplementary Major in French and Francophone Studies

The requirements for a supplementary major in French and Francophone Studies include competency in the language and successful completion of 24 credit hours or eight courses at the 200 level or above. Of these eight courses, five must be in literature/culture studies and at least half must be in residence at Notre Dame. Required among these eight courses are: ROFR 310 (Textual Analysis), ROFR 371 (French Literary Survey I), ROFR 372 (French Literary Survey II), and two courses at the 400 level. Supplementary majors may elect to take ROFR 495 (Senior Seminar) in their senior year as one of the 400-level courses, with the permission of the instructor. It is expected that these five required courses be taken in residence at Notre Dame. The requirement of ROFR 372 (French Literary Survey II) may be waived if students take both ROFR 373 and ROFR 374 in Angers—that is, two advanced courses on 19th- and 20th-century French literature. Any other substitution will require the approval of the Undergraduate Studies Advisor. AP credits satisfy the language requirement only and may not be applied to the major.

The Honors Track in French

French majors with a GPA of at least 3.7 in the major may be admitted into the honors track by invitation. In addition to completing the major, students will either take a graduate course as an 11th course (for first majors) or as a ninth course (for supplementary majors), or, by invitation, write an honors thesis, which will count as an 11th or a ninth course.

Combined B.A./M.A. Program in French

The Department of Romance Languages and Literatures offers its majors in French the opportunity to participate in its graduate program through a combination B.A./M.A. degree in French. This program requires students to take 30 credit hours at the 200 level or above during the normal four-year undergraduate period, followed by a total of 30 credit hours of graduate courses taken during the fourth and fifth years of residence. Six credit hours can be counted toward both the undergraduate and graduate degrees. During their senior year, participants in this program take two graduate courses, take the qualifying exam given to all first-year graduate students, and apply to the Graduate School for admission during the Spring semester. B.A./M.A. students are eligible for a teaching fellowship during their fifth year that includes a tuition waiver and a generous teaching stipend. Well-qualified students who are interested in this program should contact the Director of Graduate Studies and/or the Graduate Liaison in French at the beginning of their junior year.
The Major in Italian
The major requires 30 credits or 10 courses at the 200 level or above, including no more than three 200-level courses, ROIT 345 (Introduction to Italian Literature I), ROIT 385 (Introduction to Italian Literature II), a minimum of three ROIT elective courses in Italian literature or culture at the 300 or 400 level, and ROIT 495 (Italian Seminar). By permission, and depending on the student’s proficiency, a maximum of two of the three upper-division electives may be conducted in English or with texts in translation. Italian language or literature courses from international study programs or other universities may be substituted by permission. The 10th course may be another ROIT course in Italian literature or culture or a course on an Italian subject in another discipline (for example, Architecture, Art History, History). Fifty percent of the credits for the major must be taken in residence at Notre Dame.

The Supplementary Major in Italian
Supplementary majors in Italian are expected to demonstrate competency in the language and to complete 24 credits or eight courses at the 200 level or above, including no more than three at the 200 level, ROIT 345 (Introduction to Italian Literature I), ROIT 385 (Introduction to Italian Literature II), ROIT 495 (Italian Seminar), and two ROIT elective courses in Italian literature or culture at the 300 or 400 level. By permission, and depending on the student’s proficiency, these two upper-division courses may be conducted in English or with texts in translation. Italian language or literature courses from international study programs or other universities may be substituted by permission. Fifty percent of the credits for the major must be taken in residence at Notre Dame.

The Minor in Italian
The minor in Italian comprises 15 credits or five courses at the 200 level or above, including at least two courses at the 300 or 400 level. Four of the five courses must be in Italian language and/or literature; the fifth course may be a course on Italian literature taught in English or a course on an Italian subject in another discipline (Arts, Architecture, History). Courses from international study programs or other universities may be substituted by permission, but at least two courses for the Italian minor must be taken in residence at Notre Dame.

The Honors Track in Italian
Italian majors are admitted into the honors track by invitation. The honors track major consists of 33 credits or 11 courses, including all the requirements for the major, a GPA in the major of at least 3.7, plus a substantial final essay to be written in Italian for a graduate course or an Honors Directed Reading Tutorial, which will constitute the 11th course.

The Supplementary Major in Spanish
Supplementary majors in Spanish are required to demonstrate competency in Spanish and to complete 24 hours or eight courses at the 200 level or above, including the required core sequence described above or equivalents and one 400-level course. Supplementary majors may take the Senior Seminar with permission of the instructor. Equivalent courses from international study programs or other universities may be substituted with departmental approval. Fifty percent of the credits for the supplementary major must be taken in residence on the Notre Dame campus.

The Honors Track in Spanish
Spanish majors are admitted into the honors track by invitation. The honors track major consists of 33 credits or 11 courses including all the requirements for the major, a GPA in the major of at least 3.7, plus a substantial final essay to be written in Spanish for an Honors Directed Reading Tutorial, which will constitute the 11th course.

The Combined B.A./M.A. Program in Spanish
The Department of Romance Languages and Literatures offers its majors in Spanish the opportunity to participate in its graduate program through a combination B.A./M.A. degree in Spanish. This program requires students to take 30 credit hours at the 200 level or above during the normal four-year undergraduate period, followed by a total of 30 credit hours of graduate courses taken during the fourth and fifth years of residence. Six credit hours can be counted toward both the undergraduate and graduate degrees. During their senior year, participants in this program take two graduate courses, take the qualifying exam given to all first-year graduate students, and apply to the Graduate School for admission during the Spring semester. B.A./M.A. students are eligible for a teaching fellowship during their fifth year that includes a tuition waiver and a generous teaching stipend. Well-qualified students who are interested in this program should contact the Director of Graduate Studies and/or the Graduate Liaison in Spanish at the beginning of their junior year.

The Major in Romance Languages and Literatures
The undergraduate major in Romance Languages and Literatures is designed for qualified students who wish to major in two programs (French, Italian, or Spanish). Cross-cultural in focus, the major recognizes the importance of studying the correspondences and differences among various Romance literatures and cultures and of reexamining traditional disciplinary boundaries. The requirements for a major in Romance Languages and Literatures include competency in two languages and successful completion of 36 credit hours or 12 courses at the 200 level and above, distributed equally between the two respective language programs as follows:

ROIT elective courses in Italian literature or culture or a course on an Italian subject in another discipline (for example, Architecture, Art History, History). Fifty percent of the credits for the major must be taken in residence at Notre Dame.

The Minor in Italian

The Major in Romance Languages and Literatures
The undergraduate major in Romance Languages and Literatures is designed for qualified students who wish to major in two programs (French, Italian, or Spanish). Cross-cultural in focus, the major recognizes the importance of studying the correspondences and differences among various Romance literatures and cultures and of reexamining traditional disciplinary boundaries. The requirements for a major in Romance Languages and Literatures include competency in two languages and successful completion of 36 credit hours or 12 courses at the 200 level and above, distributed equally between the two respective language programs as follows:
(1) Two survey courses in each language and literature program (French or Italian); Spanish requires either four survey courses (two in peninsular and two in Latin American) or a combination of two survey courses in one area and two 400-level courses in the other area;

(2) Textual Analysis in one program;

(3) Two 400-level courses in each program (if the survey requirement in Spanish is fulfilled with two 400-level courses, these courses may count for the 400-level requirement in Spanish);

(4) One senior seminar in one program;

(5) Two elective courses at the 200 level or above in the department (any exception requires permission).

Placement in Language Courses. For French and Spanish, there is a departmental placement exam for students who have not already demonstrated language proficiency through national standardized testing, such as the AP or Achievement tests. Students with previous experience are required to take one of these tests before enrolling in their first course in those languages. The normal prerequisite for a 300-level course is at least one 200-level course or permission of the instructor. The normal prerequisite for a 400-level course is at least one 300-level course or permission of the instructor.

Policy Regarding Romance Language Placement Examination. The placement examination is designed to place each student at an appropriate level within a language sequence. It is therefore open to first-year students and sophomores. Juniors and Seniors must obtain the permission of the Department of Romance Languages and Literatures to register for the test.

Course Descriptions. The following course descriptions give the number, the title and a brief description of each course. Lecture or class hours per week, laboratory or tutorial hours per week and credits each semester are in parentheses. Not all courses are offered every year.

FRENCH

101. Beginning French (0-0-3)

An introductory, first-year language course with a balanced presentation of the spoken and written language. The goals of this course include acquisition of basic structures, vocabulary, and sound systems, as well as sowing seeds of cultural literacy. Designed for students with no previous study of French.

102A. Elementary French (4-0-3) Staff

A one-semester language course for students with some exposure to French (normally one or two years in high school). Enrollment limited to students receiving one semester advanced standing by means of the placement exams. Offered each semester.

103. Intermediate French (4-0-3) Staff

Prerequisite: 102A or placement by exam. A third-semester college language course. Includes review and expansion of basic grammatical structures. Extensive practice in speaking and writing. Readings and discussions of a variety of literary and nonliterary texts of appropriate difficulty. Completion of 103 will fulfill the language requirement and may also qualify students to study abroad. Offered each semester.

105. Angers: Atelier préparatoire (1-0-1) McDowell

A mini-course that prepares students accepted for study abroad in Notre Dame's program in Angers, France. Students are prepared for various cultural and day-to-day challenges that await them in Angers. Course begins the week after Spring Break.

111F-112F. Intensive Beginning French I and II (6-0-5)

An intensive, two-semester introductory French course, using an interactive video method to teach language and culture. Completion of 112 will fulfill the language requirement and may also qualify students to study abroad in the Angers program. 112F is also open to students who have completed 102A.

115F-215F. Intensive Intermediate French I and II for Foreign Study (5-0-5) Staff

Prerequisite: Placement by exam into the intermediate level or permission of instructor. A two-semester sequence of intensive, comprehensive training in the language skills necessary for residence and study in France. Includes review of grammar, readings, civilization and specific orientation for international study. For students with two to three years of high school French (with satisfactory achievement) preparing for the Angers international study program.

201. Advanced French I (3-0-3) Staff

Prerequisite: 103 or 112F. Emphasis on expansion and refinement of oral and written language skills (competence) requisite for work in upper-level language and literature courses. Reading and discussion of a variety of literary and nonliterary texts of appropriate difficulty. Intended for students beginning their college level work at the advanced level (see 221).

221. Advanced French Review (3-0-3) Staff

Prerequisites: 103, 112F, or placement by exam. A comprehensive grammar review at an accelerated pace combined with an in-depth study of a French novel. Students are expected to have already attained intermediate proficiency through previous study.

222. Composition and Stylistics (3-0-3) McDowell, Perry

Prerequisite: 201 or 221.

This course is designed to meet the needs of students who, having progressed beyond the basic principles of French grammar, are interested in exploring those linguistic resources that contribute to a fluent idiomatic writing style.

231. Conversational French (3-0-3) Staff

Prerequisite: 103, 201 or 221.

This course is designed to further develop the student's conversational skills and grasp of a wide variety of styles and registers in French. Spoken French will be practiced through various types of classroom activities and assignments. Emphasis will be on topics of current interest.

232. French for Business (Le français des affaires) (3-0-3) Menyard

In this course, students travel to the Francophone Business World, in order to acquire cultural and linguistic tools and develop their communicative proficiency and cultural awareness in business-related situations. Videos and the WWW are important components of this course. For business students, this would fulfill a requisite in the International Business Program.

234. Francophone Cultures (3-0-3) Coly

Prerequisite: 201 or 221.

This course will introduce students to French-speaking cultures outside of Europe, including the Caribbean, Africa, South East Asia, the Indian Ocean and French Polynesia. We will explore the history of French contact with these regions, the treatment through literature of this relationship, and conclude with an analysis of the cultural and political concept of 'Francophonie.'

235. French Civilization and Culture (3-0-3) Escoda-Risto

Prerequisite: 201 or 221. By permission only.

An introduction to the scope and variety of French culture. Geared especially toward those desiring to continue studies in language and culture but preferring to de-emphasize the literature component. Readings at an intermediate level in history, art, culture and society will be the basis for lectures and discussions. Not designed for international study returnees.
236. French Phonetics
(3-0-3) Fisher-McPeak
Prerequisite: 201 or 221.
An introduction to the study of French phonetics. Recommended for those considering a career in teaching.

237. Le Tour de France des régions
(3-0-3) Escoda-Rueto
Prerequisite: 201 or 221.
A historical, artistic and gastronomical tour of the French provinces. Intermediate-level readings will help define the identity of each region and its contribution to the national mosaic which is France.

238. Introduction to French Readings
(3-0-3) Martin
Prerequisite: 201 or 221.
A transition from the formal study of French grammar to the analysis of literary and cultural texts. An emphasis will be placed on developing reading strategies. Students planning to major in French will find this course a good preparation for advanced study.

239. French Through Acting
(3-0-3) McDowell
Prerequisite: 201 or 221.
A nontraditional approach to conversational French that asks students to create scenes for a weekly soap opera centered on a large cast of student-created characters who live together in an apartment building in France. Weekly scenes are videotaped for review of phonetics, gestures, and choice of idioms.

243F. Intensive Advanced French Review
(4-0-4) McDowell
A course for students considering a year in Angers, France. The five-day format provides an intensive grammar review and preparation for life in France along with the opportunity for students to bond as a group before their year abroad together.

270. Facets of French, France, and the French
(3-0-3) MacKenzie
Prerequisite: Intermediate competence in French, i.e., equivalent of ROFR 105. Actually four mini-courses—Conversation, Images of France in Current Cinema, Strategies and Tactics of Analysis and Oral Interpretation—ROFR 270 is intended to serve as a bridge between the language sequences and the offerings at the 300 and 400 levels.

310. Textual Analysis: The Art of Interpretation
(3-0-3) Staff
Prerequisite: Two semesters of 200-level French. Introduction to French techniques of formal analysis of literary texts through detailed study of content and form. Application to prose, poetry and theater. Includes significant written and oral component. Required of all majors.

320. French Headline News: The Hidden Daily Life of the French (La France à la une: la vie privée des Français au quotidien)
(3-0-3) Dubreuil
France has its share of cultural icons and its place as a nation and a culture is well-respected throughout the world. Beyond these façades of institutions and symbols, which are often envisioned in a too static manner, how do French people really live on a day-to-day basis? This class is designed to enable students to enter French homes through the backdoor. Students will examine articles selected from the current-year issues of French national newspapers through a web-based curriculum. This information will be supported by major theoretical texts shedding light on the various themes at the core of France’s social, political, and cultural landscape.

371-372. Survey of French Literature and Culture I and II
(3-0-3) (3-0-3) Staff
Reading of selections and complete works of outstanding French authors from major genres and periods. Required of all majors.

398. Special Studies I and II
(3-0-3) Staff
Prerequisite: Junior standing.

409. Literature and Opera
(3-0-3) MacKenzie
An examination of literary texts and the operas they engendered. Authors and composers may include Molière, Beaumarchais, Mérimee, Dumas, Mozart, Puccini, Bizet, Rossini, Verdi and others. May be taught in English as LLRO 409.

410. Le Couple maudit
(3-0-3) MacKenzie
Focuses on the numerous pairs of star-crossed lovers found in French literature, including texts such as Bérénice, Les Liaisons dangereuses, La Princesse de Clèves, Maison de la verve, Carmen, Madame Bovary, Eugénie Grandet and Un Amour de Swann.

410. Remaking French Culture
(3-0-3) Dubreuil
French movies have met with quite a success in the U.S. and have inspired in American directors or producers the desire to make French films in the American idiom. Accordingly, this class will examine American remakes of French films as well as their French sources. Remake as a cinematographic genre will be studied. Through lectures and class discussions, students will be led to explore the differences between French and American film-making with regards to cinematography, editing techniques, and production. Close examination of particular scenes and sequences will also be conducted and will be used as a basis for cross-cultural exploration.

413. Voyages in Literature
(3-0-3) Douthwaite
A topography of voyage literature encompassing 17th-, 18th- and 19th-century authors.

421. Introduction to Old French and Anglo-Norman
(3-0-3) Boulton
An introduction to the literary language of France during the 12th to 14th century. Taught in English.

426. From Roland to the Holy Grail
(3-0-3) Boulton
A survey of medieval French literature from 1100 to 1300, including the epic, the romance, drama and poetry.

427. Topics in Medieval Literature
(3-0-3) Boulton
A concentrated study of a particular author, theme or genre of Medieval French literature.

428. Medieval French Romance
(3-0-3) Boulton
A survey of the development of the medieval French romance from the 12th to the 14th century. Course may be taught in English as LLRO 428.

429. Love and War in Late Medieval France
(3-0-3) Boulton
The literature of 14th- and 15th-century France in its social and political context.

430. Love Poetry of the Renaissance
(3-0-3) DellaNeva
Prerequisite: 310.
An in-depth study of the love poetry of Scèvre, Du Bellay, Ronsard and their contemporaries.

432. Life, Love, and Literature in Renaissance Lyons
(3-0-3) DellaNeva
This course focuses on the city of Lyon, the cultural center of the French Renaissance. Literary works include extensive readings from the city’s major poets, Scève, Du Guilleret, Labé, as well as excerpts from the works of Rabelais, Marot, and Du Bellay. Cultural topics include the role of women in French society, art, music, royal pageantry, banking, printing, and the presence of Italians in Lyon.

434. The Renaissance Woman
(3-0-3) DellaNeva
A study of women in French Renaissance culture, with special emphasis on the works of women writers such as Marguerite de Navarre, Louise Labé and Pernette Du Guilleret. This course may be offered in English as LLRO 434.

435. Topics in French Renaissance Literature
(3-0-3) DellaNeva
An in-depth study of a particular theme, author or genre in Renaissance literature.
436. Life, Love, and Literature in the Reign of Francis I
(3-0-3) DellaNeva
This course will include selections from the early court poets known as the “Rhetoriques,” Rabelais, Marot, and Marguerite de Navarre (sister of Francis I). The cultural component of this course studies the art, music, and architecture of the châteaux of the Loire Valley and Fontainebleau. Special attention is given to the role of Francis I as an initiator of the French Renaissance and the religious unrest of the times.

437. Life, Love, and Literature in the World of the Baroque
(3-0-3) DellaNeva
This course focuses on the literature of the last quarter of the sixteenth century, including the late poetry of Ronsard, his rival Desportes, Montaigne, and the religious poets D’Aubigné, Du Bartas, La Cépédé, and Sponde. Cultural topics include the Reformation movement and the aesthetic of the Baroque.

442. Auteurs/Auteur de Port Royal
(3-0-3) MacKenzie
A study of works reflecting a Jansenist world view: Pascal’s Lettres provinciales et Pensées; La Rochefoucauld’s Maximes; La Bruyère’s Caractères; Racine’s Andromaque and Phèdre; and LaFayette’s La Princesse de Clèves.

443. Reading Versailles
(3-0-3) MacKenzie
The political, social and artistic phenomena resumed in the word Versailles, approached from a number of perspectives: historical, architectural, mythological, in painting and in literature.

444. Topics in 17th-Century French Literature
(3-0-3) MacKenzie
The format of this course will allow for a variety of approaches: e.g., thematic or generic, or the work of a particular author.

446. Fate, Freud, and Phèdre
(3-0-3) MacKenzie
An investigation of Racine’s Phèdre, Euripides’ Hippolytos and Seneca’s Phaedra. The course will focus on issues such as fate, free will, original sin and sexuality.

450. What Is Enlightenment? Approaches to a Concept
(3-0-3) Perry
A study of late 19th- and early 20th-century French prose and poetry, in conjunction with the music of Wagner and the philosophies of Schopenhauer, Nietzsche, and Bergson. Works by Baudelaire, Huysmans, Rachilde, Verlaine, Mallarmé, Barrès, Gide, Proust, Anna de Noailles, Colette, Valéry.

(3-0-3) Douthwaite

(3-0-3) Faculty
Prerequisite: Senior Spanish majors only.
This course may cover an in-depth study of a particular author, theme, genre or century. In addition to treating primary texts, some critical material will be required reading. The course culminates in a substantial research paper. May be taken either fall or spring term.

498. Special Studies
(3-0-3) Staff
Prerequisites: Senior standing, dean’s list.

499. Thesis
(3-0-3) Staff

The following courses are taught in English. There are no prerequisites.

180. Literature University Seminar
Cultural and literary crossroads in the Francophone, Italian and Hispanic worlds. Restricted to first-year students.
481. Italian Film and Literature
(3-0-3) Welle
Italian films and literary works are analyzed to study the points of intersection and divergence between film and literature.

485. Modern French Literature in Translation
(3-0-3) Toumayan
A study of major works of 19th- and 20th-century French literature, including works by Baudelaire, Flaubert, Proust, Valéry, Malraux, Camus, Sartre, Beckett and Hebert.

487. African and Caribbean Women Writers
(3-0-3)
Writings by women from the Francophone cultures of North (the Maghreb) and sub-Saharan Africa and the Caribbean (Martinique, Guadeloupe and Haiti). An examination of the political and sociological circumstances in which women have produced literature in these national spaces, their respective ideological stances, attempts at constructing cultural and political identities and the emergence of a feminist aesthetics. Taught in English. Crosslisted with ROFR 487.

Program of Studies. The Department of Sociology has a national reputation and its scope of interest is worldwide. Yet it also is intensely concerned with the U.S. cultural and social experience and its problems.

The requirements for a sociology major reflect a program that offers both structure and flexibility. The program is designed to acquaint the student with the core of the discipline and with areas of specialization which can be studied in some depth.

Sociology deals with human interaction on the group level wherever it may occur: in family and business, law and politics, medicine and religion, and a host of other settings. What can you do with a sociology degree? Notre Dame’s survey of alumni who majored in sociology revealed that they are employed as university professors, corporation executives, real estate agents, insurance agents, consultants, politicians, medical administrators, teachers, social workers, business managers, religious ministers, and many other occupations.
The requirements for the sociology major are as follows.

(a) Every student is encouraged to take SOC 102, Understanding Societies, or SOC 304, Principles of Sociology. Neither course is required but recommended as a good foundation for the sociology major.

(b) Students must take a minimum of 25 credit hours (usually eight courses and the proseminar—one credit) offered by the department. Students are urged to start their major as early as possible but can declare a major or change majors at any time as long as they are able to fulfill the requirements.

(c) The requirements for the major are the following four courses:
SOC 300, Foundations of Sociological Theory
SOC 302, Research Methods
SOC 303, Statistics in the Professions
SOC 390, Proseminar (one credit)

Required courses should be taken as soon as possible, especially before taking any 400-level courses.

(d) Each major must take a minimum of two 400-level lecture or seminar courses. Internships (SOC 496) and Independent Studies (SOC 497) do not fulfill this requirement.

(e) A maximum of six credit hours of internship can be used as electives to meet the 25-hour requirement for the major. Normally a student should take an appropriate lecture course in preparation for the internship.

The department prides itself on its program of close personal advising, in which each major can build a program of courses with the help of a faculty advisor and Undergraduate Director. Advisors willingly give much time to aid students in planning their course schedules and careers. Each major is assigned to a faculty advisor whose own academic interests dovetail with those of the student. Each student, working closely with a faculty advisor, can map out a personalized program of study that will satisfy the department’s requirements for the major and simultaneously accommodate the student’s academic interests and career aspirations.

The department also insists that its students have ample opportunity to develop further their scientific and creative writing skills. Thus, all faculty are urged to require intensive writings in each class. Indeed, SOC 300 (Foundations of Sociological Theory), required of all sociology majors, is designated by the sociology department as a “most intensive” writing course.

The sociology major can be pursued along with another major. Many of our students combine sociology with a major in business, economics, political science, preprofessional, psychology, theology, etc. It is important to note that students in the Mendoza College of Business who wish to major in sociology in addition to their business major do not have to meet all the other requirements of the College of Arts and Letters.

Of particular interest to students in recent years have been the Gender Studies Interdisciplinary Major (GSC2) or Minor (MGSC), the program of the International Institute for Peace Studies (IIPS), the Computer Applications Program (CAP2), the Hesburgh Program in Public Service (MHES), and the Program in Social Work at Saint Mary’s College. All of the above are readily combined with a sociology major.

Students pursuing a major in sociology must meet all requirements for the major or equivalent courses. Additional courses from other departments and programs may be accepted as fulfilling the major, provided they meet with the approval of the sociology department. The department tries to be flexible when working out an individual student’s program, and with the advisor’s recommendation, other modifications also are possible.

The department has an active Epsilon Chapter of Alpha Kappa Delta, the international sociology honor society. Especially through the AKD, as well as through informal meetings in faculty homes and field trips, majors make strong friendships with other majors having common interests. Students interested in the various phases of the program are encouraged to contact the director of Undergraduate Studies (Room 823 Flanner Hall) at any time.

The department also encourages students to join the University of Notre Dame Sociology Club. The purpose of this club is to enrich the sociology major. This student organization sponsors activities oriented to careers in sociology and sociology-oriented careers, to becoming professionally active while in college, and to student interests in society, as well as to purely social activities.

Course Descriptions. The following course descriptions give the number and title of each course. Lecture hours per week, laboratory and/or tutorial hours per week and credits each semester are in parentheses. The instructor’s name is also included.

102. Understanding Societies
(3-0-3) Myers, Yamane, Hachen
Sociological analysis of personality, culture and society. A variety of groups and institutions are studied, including the economy and business, law and politics, religion and churches, marriage and family, education and schools, inequality and equality.

122. Introduction to Social Psychology
(3-0-3) Welch, Johnson, Myers, Power
Analysis of important human processes including perceiving and knowing other people, attitudes and attitude change, conformity and nonconformity, cooperation and competition with others, leadership in groups, attraction and love, aggression and violence, prejudice.

180. Social Sciences University Seminar
(3-0-3) Christiano, Hachen, Klein, Sikkink, Carbonaro
An introduction to the seminar method of instruction, accenting the organization and expression of arguments suggested by readings in sociology. Each of the seminars treats a particular sociological topic, such as family life, social problems, the urban crisis, poverty.

202. Today’s Organizations
(3-0-3) Hachen
Examines macrosociological topics such as social evolution theories of industrial societies, the historical development of capitalism, hierarchical differentiations within a society (social classes, social status, urbanization) and the bureaucratic structures of organizations. Will enable students to analyze their societal structure in terms of history, present configuration and dynamic processes.

218. Ethnicity, Gangs, and Organized Crime
(3-0-3) Staff
This course examines the intersection of ethnicity, gangs, and organized crime from both a historical and sociological viewpoint. We will undertake a basic survey of criminological theories as they apply to ethnic and group crime; we will attempt to explain and define organized crime, with a particular emphasis on ethnic Mafias; and we will examine the phenomenon of ethnic gangs in the United States today.

220. Social Psychology
(3-0-3) Welch, Williams, Myers, Power
An analysis of important human processes, including perceiving and knowing other people, attitudes and attitude change, conformity and nonconformity, cooperation and competition with others, leadership in groups, attraction and love, aggression and violence, prejudice. Specifically designed for sociology and other liberal arts majors and will emphasize theory and research. As a result, it is not recommended for students having had SOC 122, as the content may overlap.

228. Social Inequality and American Education
(3-0-3) Carbonaro
Many have claimed that the American educational system is the “great equalizer among men.” In other words, the educational system gives everyone a chance to prosper in American society regardless of each person’s social origins. In this course, we explore the validity of this claim. Do schools help make American society more equal by reducing the importance of class, race, and gender as sources of inequality, or do schools simply reinforce existing inequalities and reproduce pre-existing social relations? Topics covered include unequal resources among schools, sorting practices of students within schools, parents’ roles in determining student outcomes, the role of schooling in determining labor market outcomes for individuals, and the use of educational programs as a remedy for poverty.
232. Social Problems
(3-0-3) Johnson, Gibbons
Analysis of selected problems in American society such as crime, narcotic addiction, alcoholism, delinquency, racial and ethnic conflict, prostitution and others. Discussions, debates, films, tapes and readings.

234. Criminal Justice
(3-0-3) McVeigh
This course is intended to introduce the student to various aspects of the criminal justice system, including the police, the prosecutor, the courts and parole. The primary focus will be on a sociological analysis of crime and the workings of the criminal justice system. Topics will include social perception of the criminal justice system, relations between members of the criminal justice systems and the community, treatment of women and minorities in the criminal justice system, and current events.

242. Marriage and Family
(3-0-3) Klein, Cassirer
Changing family patterns, sex roles, sexuality, premarital relationships, marriage and divorce, parenthood, childhood and family interaction are some of the topics. Singles, dual-career families, alternative marriage forms and the future of marriage and family are also taken up.

300. Foundations of Sociological Theory
(3-0-3) Fishman, Pinglé, Yamane
Limited to sociology majors. This course surveys the history of social thought in the United States and Europe since the 19th century. Emphasis is given to major theorists who have contributed to such principal movements of sociological theory as Marxism, structural-functionalism, social Darwinism, pragmatism and symbolic interactionism.

302. Research Methods
(3-0-3) Gunty, Hachen, LeClere, Carbonaro, Williams
 Begins with discussion of scientific method, conceptualization of research problems and measurement. The course then explores the dominant modes of social science research: field work and participant observation, survey and interviewing, experimental designs and evaluation research.

303. Statistics in the Professions
(3-1-4) Johnson, Myers, Gibbons
Designed to teach students how to interpret and critically evaluate statistics commonly used in the social sciences and in many areas of the business and medical world to describe, project and evaluate. Focus is upon a conceptual understanding of what the statistic does, what it means and what assumptions are being made in its use. The course requires only high school arithmetic and is not mathematically difficult.

306. Race and Ethnicity in America
(3-0-3) Cassirer
This course focuses on race and ethnic relations in the United States. Current cases involving racial and ethnic issues will be presented and discussed in class. Readings and materials will present three approaches to the study of majority-minority group relations, the emergence and maintenance of group dominance and minority-group adaptations to modes of dominance, including separation, accommodation, acculturation and assimilation. Class participation and students’ experiences will be emphasized.

309. Culture and Society: Sociological Approaches
(3-0-3) Spillman
In this class we will examine cultural dimensions of important social processes, and we will survey contemporary sociological approaches to analyzing culture. Examples will include readings on home and work, social hierarchies, political culture, media and the arts, and social change.
320. Sociology of Aging
(3-0-3) Klein
With life expectancy increasing and birth rates declining, the populations of Western cultures have been rapidly aging. What are the implications of this aging process for social institutions (the family, economy, government) as well as for the individual well-being of the elderly? What does the future hold for those of us who will spend an increasing proportion of our lives past age 65? These and other questions are addressed in this course, which focuses on the social, economic and personal challenges facing all of us in the latter half of the life cycle.

326. Technology and Social Change
(3-0-3) Alpert
This class examines how technology has often served as the catalyst for social change for hundreds—indeed, thousands—of years. The course is divided into several sections, some of which will trace from a historical perspective the social impact of specific technologies—some predating the Industrial Revolution, such as the clock, the stirrup, and the pulley. Other course sections will examine technology and social change in specific contexts—e.g., the medical and communication contexts. The first portion of the course will be devoted to some of the basic issues in our collective understanding of technology and social change. Issues such as deskilling of workers, institutionalization of technology into society, and innovation will be examined, as will various approaches to understanding technology, such as the social construction of technology and technological determinism.

331. The Sociology of Time
(3-0-3)
Every Notre Dame student knows about time pressure. Have you ever wondered why? We tend to accept Time as a physical fact that is given, to which we must adapt. But the study of Time is one of the fastest growing areas of sociology. Time is socially created, it is part of the foundation of social life and it affects the shape of every other social institution — and it varies from society to society. In this course we will study how and why Time can vary and how differences in the institution of Time affect people’s lives. A few of the topics we will study are the fundamental difference between cyclical and linear time; why some societies are clock watching, while others move to a more natural rhythm; and, how it came to be that “time is money.”

332. Criminology
(3-0-3) McVeigh
Crime data, crime causation theories, criminal behavior systems, criminal procedure and corrections. Firsthand knowledge of courts, police jails and prisons is encouraged. Optional field trips.

333. Sociology of Education
(3-0-3) Sikkink, Hallinan, Power, Carbonaro
This course focuses on the relationship between education and society. In the course, a variety of theoretical approaches and contemporary issues in the field of education will be discussed. Topics to be addressed include, but are not limited to, gender and race inequalities in education, the role of schools as agents of selection and socialization, and the nature of educational reform movements. Class participation and the experiences of students will be emphasized.

338. Poverty, Inequality, and Social Stratification
(3-0-3) Myers
Social inequality is a prominent and persistent feature of modern society. Social stratification theory attempts to explain the causes of inequality and the reasons for its persistence. This course will address such questions as: Why are some people rich and some people poor? Why does inequality persist? Why gets ahead? Can men and women get the same jobs? Do different races have the same opportunities? Is inequality necessary? Potential topics include inner-city and rural poverty, welfare dependency, homelessness, status attainment and occupational mobility, racial and ethnic stratification, gender stratification and class theory.

341. Witnessing the Sixties
(3-0-3) Giamo
The purpose of this interdisciplinary course is two-fold: to examine the social context and cultural change of the sixties, on the one hand, and on the other to explore the various journalistic representations of events, movements, and transformation. We will focus on the manner in which each writer witnessed the sixties and explore fresh styles of writing, such as the new journalism popularized by Tom Wolfe. Major topics for consideration include the counterculture and the movement — a combination of civil rights and anti-war protest.

346. Today’s Gender Roles
(3-0-3) Aldous
Prerequisite: Sociology course. Current changes in male and female roles and the reasons for these changes are examined. Existing gender differences, various explanations for them and proposals for change are discussed and evaluated.

347. Global Society
(3-0-3)
“Globalization” is the buzzword of the new millennium— but what does it mean? (For example, some critics say that “globalization” means the “McDonaldization” of the world.) Economics is increasingly global, but is a global society even possible, let alone inevitable? How do society and economy interact in a world made ever smaller by technology — and, can anyone control this process? How will globalization affect America and Americans? How will it affect real people, wherever they are from? Who would benefit from a global society, and who would not? To answer these questions we will aim to penetrate behind both the hype and the horror stories about “globalization,” and clarify this amorphous concept in concrete terms. To do this, we will use a broad range of readings and other media to explore the many dimensions of our topic. Class time will be used for mini-lectures, discussions and presentations.

353. Society and Cultures of South Asia
(3-0-3) VanHollen
This course provides a broad introduction to societies and cultures of South Asia, including India, Pakistan, Bangladesh, Sri Lanka, Nepal, Bhutan, and the Maldives. Emphasis will be on the Indian subcontinent. Central themes and topics include religious pluralism and communalism; linguistic pluralism and ethnonationalism; the ideologies and practices of caste, class, and gender; colonialism and postcolonial development projects; healing and the construction of the body; aesthetic traditions (film, dance, music, art); and experiences of the South Asian Diaspora, particularly in North America.

363. Social Concerns Seminar: Cultural Diversity
(1-0-1) McNeil
Prerequisite: Permission from Center of Social Concerns.
The purpose of this course is to begin to analyze the social forces that contribute to ethnic and cultural diversity and to related tensions, including racism. Students participate in a five-day program at selected Chicago sites that provide an orientation to a culturally diverse community. Students engage in discussion on relevant issues with local residents and community leaders.
367. Child in Comparative Perspective
(3-0-3) Valenzuela
This course provides a detailed analysis of the development of the Chilean economy, society and policy since independence from Spain in 1818, drawing selected comparisons with other national experiences. It then discusses the validity of theoretical statements on central questions in the social science literature by examining them in light of the Chilean case. The main issues to be examined are the reasons for the successes or failures of Third World development, the origins and breakdowns of democracies, the characteristics of authoritarian regimes, and processes of restoring democracies.

369. Caribbean Diasporas
(3-0-3) Richman
Born out of the violent processes of conquest and enslavement, Caribbean societies have developed cultures with roots in Africa and Europe, but with distinctive American identities. This course examines the development of Creole societies in the French, Spanish, Dutch, and British Caribbean in response to colonialism, slavery, and, most recently, transnationalism. The recent exodus of as much as 20 percent of Caribbean populations to North America and Europe has afforded the rise of new transnational modes of existence. Caribbean communities now span multiple sites across nation-states. Constant comings and goings of messages, people, spirits, gifts, and money keep members of host and home communities actively involved with one another’s lives. They creatively appropriate the same technologies of communication, media, and travel that have aided the rapid shifts of capital in the Caribbean and around the globe. This course will explore the consciousness and experience of Caribbean diasporas through ethnography and history, religion, literature, music, and culinary arts.

370. Self and Society
(3-0-3) Gibbons
You are an outcome of your past social environment, yet you can be independent of it. The goal of this course is to help you think reflectively about society and your place in it, to be aware of the values involved in people’s perspectives on social issues, and to become aware of the social processes that define who you are.

We spend most of our lives in a “taken for granted” world. We are taught certain values and ways of acting in different situations. Our values and behavioral patterns become a “natural” response to people and events that we encounter daily. A concrete aim in this course is to increase your conscious reflection and decision-making in everyday life. Enhanced self-awareness entails self-knowledge—how you learn, your behavioral style, and your values. This course in applied social psychology should have practical value as you enter more fully into a culturally diverse and fragmented world.

372. Religion and Social Life
(3-0-3) Christianso
Critical examination of the social and sociopsychological aspects of religion in the modern world. Special attention is given to the current theoretical and research issues.

373. Religion and Labor Management
(3-0-3) Staff
This course examines current faith-based movements seeking to promote workplace justice and greater management/labor cooperation. The collaboration of unions and managers is essential, in the face of so many disadvantages for U.S. companies (e.g., trade imbalance, foreign government subsidization, market competition, plant revitalization, profit margins, labor costs, and reinvestment). Industrial-society literature reveals the crucial role of workers, in terms of motivation, job performance, morale, productivity, job satisfaction, and the prospects for industrial democracy—worker co-ownership and co-management. Sociology of religion literature reveals the collaborative nature of the major U.S. religious groups in social issues such as civil rights, poverty, and labor-management crises. The history and teaching of Catholic, Jewish, and Protestant groups in the United States evidences concern about issues such as humanization in work-healthy and safe conditions, adequate wages, fringe benefits, the right to organize for collective bargaining, and worker participation in management and ownership. The course stresses the possibilities, responsibilities, and strategies in interfactionalism with enlightened business and labor groups for more cooperative and productive labor-management.

375. Polish Americans
(3-0-3) Chrobot
A study of the cultural and racial pluralism of American society through the focus of the Polish American experience; a review of the social and historical background, the immigration experience, and adaptation to the American experiment in terms of family, religion, education, work, and government.

376. Sociology of Religious Conversion
(3-0-3) Yamane
Prerequisite: SOC 302.
This course is a practicum in which students participate in a research project on religious conversion being conducted by a sociology faculty member. In the first third of the course, students will learn about the theory and methods relevant to the social scientific study of religious conversion. In the second two-thirds of the course, students will be personally involved in the collection and analysis of data on conversion to Roman Catholicism through the Rite of Christian Initiation of Adults. A final paper that reports on the data analysis is required. The emphasis of the course is on the collection and analysis of primary data within an ongoing sociological study. Failure to complete any aspect of the data collection and analysis will result in a failing grade.

390. Proseminar
(1-0-1) Power
Limited to sociology majors. Introduction to library and social research laboratory resources; the career options available to sociology graduates; preparations for graduate, law or professional schools; and relationship of sociology to social work, psychology and other disciplines.

391A. Intermediate Analysis of Collective Contention I
(3-0-3) Myers
Prerequisite: Permission of instructor. Enrollment in SOC 391B in spring semester is required. This course is a yearlong class examining theoretical developments and empirical analysis of collective contention. Students will conduct intensive research projects involving thorough literature review, formal proposal, statistical and interpretive analysis, and the writing of a professional research report.

398. Special Studies
(V-V-V)

402. Population Dynamics
(3-0-3) Williams
Demography, the science of population, is concerned with virtually everything that influences, or can be influenced by, population size, distribution, processes, structure or characteristics. This course pays particular attention to the causes and consequences of population change. Changes in fertility, mortality, migration, technology, lifestyle and culture have dramatically affected the United States and the other nations of the world. These changes have implications for a number of areas: hunger, the spread of illness and disease, environmental degradation, health services, household formation, the labor force, marriage and divorce, care for the elderly, birth control, poverty, urbanization, business marketing strategies and political power. An understanding of these is important as business, government and individuals attempt to deal with the demands of the changing population.

403. International Migration: Mexico and the United States I
(1-0-1) Bustamante
Three-week course consisting of six sessions of three hours each. Different conceptual approaches presented in lecture format. One session links various themes with the cause of Mexican immigration to the United States. Another is dedicated to the historical analysis of Mexican immigration to the United States. A third attempts to link the historical context with a theoretical approach and another session will be dedicated to the professor’s own theoretical approach in contrast with the others previously discussed. Fall.
404. International Migration: Mexico and the United States II
(1-0-2) Bustamante
A three-week course which refers to a review of basic questions on international migration, with emphasis on immigration to the United States and the methods through which these questions have been adequately or inadequately answered. The numbers, impact, nature, structure, process and human experience will be discussed in terms of the research methods commonly used to approach them. Spring.

405. Exploring Identities
(3-0-3) Pingle
How do we define ourselves? What are the various components of one’s identity and how do we begin to understand these issues sociologically? These themes form the outlines of this course. We will explore identities, their formation, and their consequences; in post-colonial and in western societies, in peaceful and in societies experiencing ethnic/racial conflict, among women and men, and in developed and in developing countries. Drawing on novels, films, autobiographies, and sociological arguments we will piece together a framework for understanding the identity landscapes of which we are a part.

407. Honors Tutorial
(3-0-3) Staff
Prerequisite: Permission of instructor. Intensive independent study and research on selected sociological topics, generating a scholarly experience will be discussed in terms of the research methods commonly used to approach them.

413. Cultural Sociology
(3-0-3) Spillman
In this class we will examine cultural dimensions of important social processes, and we will survey contemporary sociological approaches to analyzing culture. Examples will include readings on home and work, social hierarchies, political culture, media and the arts, and social change. This class cannot be taken if SOC 309 has previously been taken; course content may overlap.

415. Political Sociology
(3-0-3) Valenzuela, Fishman
This course explores the impact of social forces and societal dynamics on politics. Major themes include sociological explanation for the emergence and stability — or crisis and breakdown — of democracy; the extent to which election outcomes and policy choices are shaped by societal dynamics or remain independent of social determination; equality in shaping political life; and the impact of both social consensus and social conflict in the political arena. This course explores theoretical debates and empirical work, focusing on the national experience of various countries including the United States. Students will be encouraged to develop their own thoughts about important questions for research.

(3-0-3) Cárdenas
This course will examine the uses of photography and film in sociology and will explore the impact of visual expression on society. This includes introductory work in documentary photography and film, gender advertising, ethnographic film, political cinema, muralism and social protest art. This is a sociology course and will emphasize the study of social aspects of photography, film and artistic expression, rather than technique, without ignoring the relationship between the two aspects. We will not emphasize the technical/lab training in photography. This course, while broad in scope, will rely on content that is very heavily grounded on a social problem context as is found in the United States, the American Southwest, Mexico, and Latin America.

Homework and projects will include: (1) a short essay on documentary photography and the study of social problems and issues or photography assignments (black and white), print-slide work; and (2) other creative work.

Evaluation: Two exams will be given; no final. The exams will constitute 40 percent of the grade: short essay, critiques, and class participation, 20 percent of the grade; and projects 40 percent of the grade. Students should have access to their own equipment (i.e., camera) and will be responsible for developing and printing (yourself or commercially) if a photo project is chosen.

419. Self, Society, and Environment
(3-0-3) Weigert
This course introduces students to social psychological aspects of the natural environment. Issues considered include interacting with different environments, symbolic transformations of environments, competing accounts and claims concerning environments. With an overview of basic information, these issues are discussed from the perspectives of individual self and socio-cultural institutions. The course touches on alternative ways of envisioning, interacting and valuing human-environment relations with an eye toward individual and collective change.

420. Organizations
(3-0-3) Hachen
Organizations are complex and multifaceted entities. Organizations are more than just collections of people behaving and interacting in certain ways. Organizational behavior and interactions are structured by rules and procedures, jobs and occupations, authority relations, goals and strategies, technologies and distributions of power. Within our organizations not only are orders given and tasks accomplished, but also decisions are made, conflicts occur and are sometimes resolved, and control is exercised. Finally, organizations interact with other organizations and actors in their environment. These interactions can lead to changes in organizational goals, strategies and structures or changes in the environment in which the organization operates.

Given the complexity of organizations, it is not surprising that there are numerous theories of organization. In the first half of the course we will discuss various theoretical approaches. The objective will be to critically analyze these theoretical approaches by comparing the different characteristics of organizations that each theory discusses. The second half of the course will deal with specific aspects of organization (goals and strategies, technology, environments, decision making, conflict, power and control). The objective is to develop a more complete understanding of the complex nature of organizations and to compare organizations along a variety of dimensions.

423. Race, Ethnicity, and Identities
(3-0-3) Pingle
How do we define ourselves and why? What does this definition say about our society? How are peaceful social relations maintained in multicultural societies? What contributes to ethnic and racial conflict? Drawing heavily on social theory, and focusing on the experiences of Yugoslavia, Sri Lanka, South Africa and the United States, this course will explore the issues of identity, race, and ethnicity. The grade for the class is based on class presentations, a midterm exam, and a final paper.

425. Ethnicity in America
(3-0-3) Chrobot
A study of the ethnic and racial formation of American society and cultural pluralism; a review of the theory and history of ethnicity, its policy implications for family, education, economics, religion, government and international relations: in-depth study of one ethnic group of choice.
427. Culture and Power
(3-0-3) Spillman
How do norms, values, symbols and rituals operate to dominate or empower? In this class we will examine a number of important classical and contemporary texts which offer answers to this question, which has been a theme of recent work in a variety of fields in sociology. At the same time we will examine concrete cases, selected from studies of development, deviance, gender, mass communications, organizations, social movements, and stratification. Some reading assignments will be demanding; however, some class time will be allocated to work with assigned readings.

428. Social Ties, Social Networks, Social Capital
(3-0-3) Fishman
This course examines three fundamental and interrelated sociological concepts, each of which offers us an approach to the study of social connections and their impact on the human experience. Social ties, social networks and social capital overlap substantially in their scholarly usage but the concepts are far from identical. We will review theoretical and methodological literature on all three concepts as well as major empirical studies that examine the world through one or more of these perspectives. We will explore both theoretical and practical arguments for the selection of one or more of these conceptual approaches as the basis for studying how social connections shape the human experience.

The course is intended to stimulate a critical reading of recent literature on contemporary society and to assist students who wish to use one or more of these concepts in their work.

429. Conflict and Social Life
(3-0-3) Klein
This course focuses on theory and research concerning the nature, causes, consequences, prevention and resolution of social conflicts. Conducted in a seminar format, each student reads a unique set of materials, summarizes them in class and discusses the ideas presented by others. Every student selects one institutional setting or social context for special focus. Then students write and present during the seminar a critical review of issues in their chosen areas.

431. The Fifties
(3-0-3) Halton
The 1950s witnessed unprecedented prosperity in the United States, as well as major transformation of American society related to the Cold War, the rise of suburbs, the baby boom, the flowering of forms of popular culture, the spread of mass culture, and the demise of high modernist culture. This course will explore the many-sided manifestations of culture and changes of American society associated with the decade of “the fifties.”

432. Blues and American Culture
(3-0-3) Halton
Blues and jazz are two distinctive musical expressions of African American culture which also reflect American social life. Growing out of the African American experience, the blues provide a focus through which to see many aspects of 20th-century social history in America, from the changing identities of African American culture to problems of racism, poverty, industrialization and urbanization.

This course will draw from a variety of written and audiovisual materials to explore the ways in which blues both expresses the American experience and provides an indicator of American society. The course will trace the evolution of the blues in Chicago and interweave that evolution with the sociology of Chicago.

433. Transnational Societies and Cultures
(3-0-3) Staff
This course analyzes how cultural identities and behaviors are formed in the context of global systems. Through specific case studies, students explore how differing social groups construct their cultures in interaction with other cultures and how, in so doing, these groups are both responding to and shaping global agendas. Focusing on linkages between local and international systems, this course investigates issues such as the globalization of Western media, the rise of transnational corporations and their effects on indigenous economies, population displacement (e.g., refugee populations), tourism and its effects on local populations, the growth of transnational social movements (particularly those active in human rights policy), the role of missionaries in the creation of transnational society, and the effects of “free trade” and structural adjustment policies in the Third World. This course exposes students to different theories of globalization and discusses why the study of regional, national, and international linkages has become a critical component of contemporary anthropological research.

434. The Schooled Society
(3-0-3) Hallinan, Sikkink, Carbonaro
This seminar focuses on the structure and organization of schooling in American society, and the societal forces that influence decisions about schools and student learning. These forces include legislation governing schooling, and cultural and religious norms that impact schools. The course will cover the role of schools in society, the political, economic and social dimensions of schooling, education reform and its underpinnings, and the transformation of higher education.

436. Society and Culture Through Films
(3-0-3) Damatta
This course will deal with a variety of social issues as they are perceived, conceived, represented and understood by movies. The focus of this course will not be on cinema history, cinema structure or moviemaking processes but on how important human problems such as cultural diversity, race relations, the crafting of national identity and national heroes, urban life, class conflict, family structure, war, and values such as success, love, happiness, fairness, misfortune, destiny, honesty, faith and the like are depicted and treated by movies.

438. Race Relations in the United States
(3-0-3) Cassirer
This course focuses on racism and race relations in the United States. Current issues involving racial issues will be presented and discussed in class. Readings, discussion and lectures will examine the background and current status of the dominant ethnic minority groups in the United States today. The issue of race will also be viewed in relationship to police practices, housing patterns, economic opportunities, gender relations and politics. Class participation and student experiences will be emphasized.

441. Family Policy Seminar
(3-0-3) Aldous
The seminar covers family policy in the United States and in other countries with a concentration in the United States. There is comparison of the background, content and consequences of policies in the various countries. Such provocative topics as welfare policy, parental leave and child care are discussed. The relation between families and the work setting or families and government will also be addressed. A discussion format is used. Students write a term paper on some aspect of family policy. It is directed especially for juniors, seniors and graduates.

442. Family Development
(3-0-3) Klein
Family Development is directed to the sociology, psychology, counseling, preprofessional, nursing, social work and other majors who will necessarily be working with or seeking to understand families in the course of their occupations. The course covers change in families, from the time couples marry until their dissolution by divorce or death of one of the spouses. Parent-child relations beginning when children are born until parents’ death, changes in sibling relations as persons age, as well as the development of the marital union, will be examined. The family cycles of childless and one-parent families will also be included. Students have the opportunity to apply the course material on family careers to their own families within the context of marriage, occupational and educational plans. They do a case history of a family to gain experience in using the family development approach.
SOCIOLOGY

443. Deviant Behavior
(3-0-3) McVeigh
This course is concerned primarily with the sociological conceptions and theories of deviance. At the onset, deviance is differentiated from those phenomena designated as social problems and social disorganization. The remainder of the course focuses on deviant acts and deviations. Various responses are explored to questions such as: What are deviants? What does it mean to be a deviant—to the deviant himself, as well as to others? What common social processes and experiences do most deviants undergo?

Various theories or models of delinquency, crime, suicide, sex deviation, and drug use are used to aid in constructing a sociological understanding of deviance, the analysis of deviant acts, and the formation of deviant careers or roles.

444. State Formation and Society: Contrasting Paths in England and France
(3-0-3) Valenzuela
Whether it is the development of democracy under a monarchy or a republic, the effects of religion on politics, intellectual and cultural styles, the characteristics of the legal system, the extension of suffrage to men and to women, the creation of party systems, the formation and development of the labor movement, the relationship of the military establishment to the head of state, or simply the matter of overall political stability, France and England offer the most interesting contrasts among advanced Western European countries. This course examines the political and social history of the two countries and tries to tease out these differences while trying to explain them.

445. World Families
(3-0-3) Aldous
Families in different parts of the world and of different historical periods are studied to gain perspective on American family changes. Current variations in families are examined.

446. Family Problem Solving
(3-0-3) Klein, Cassee
In-depth analysis of the processes families use to solve the problems they face. Material is drawn from the social psychology of small groups, the sociology of format organizations, and research and theory directly concerned with family problem solving. This course is designed for students who plan on working with families professionally.

449. Sociology of Masculinity
(3-0-3) Guary
This seminar explores the social construction of masculinity and its many forms, both traditional and emerging, through readings, movies, discussions and writing assignments. Members of the seminar will seek a better understanding of shifting roles, identities and social structures that influence the way both males and females develop the meaning of masculinity. Topics include socialization, role conflicts, gender violence, sexuality, the impact of fathering and men’s movements. The masculinities in the United States and around the world. It is intended to complement the study of gender in other disciplines, but some familiarity with basic concepts in sociology is strongly recommended.

453. Building Democratic Institutions in First-Wave Democracies
(3-0-3) Valenzuela
Elements of democratic regimes emerged long before the regimes as such can be identified as being minimally in place. Beginning with a brief discussion of the essential features of democracies, the course examines how and why such institutions emerged, and the critical moments in which the actual transitions to the new democratic regimes occurred. The course focuses on democratizations that took place before the Second World War, and will examine key European and Latin American cases.

461. History, Politics, and Society of Chile
(3-0-3) Valenzuela
An introduction to the formation and development of Chilean National Society. The course begins by examining the colonial period and the struggle for independence. It then focuses on 19th- and 20th-century issues such as the consolidation of the Central State, the development of Democracy, the creation of the party and electoral systems, economic cycles of growth and stagnation, the break down of democracy in 1973, the Pinochet dictatorship, and the return to democracy in the 1990s. Class lectures and discussions will include relevant comparisons with other Latin American and even European Countries.

462. Aesthetics of Latino Cultural Expression
(3-0-3) Cárdenas
This course analyzes the philosophy and principles underlying the social and political aspects of Latino art.

463. Nationalism
(3-0-3) Staff
Nationalism embraces a type of identity, a form of politics, and a basis for organizing societies. This course studies the origins, nature, and possible future of nationalism, overall and in particular cases that will be determined by students’ interests—for example, what our responses to September 11 tells us about American nationalism. The main assignment will be a research paper on a topic chosen by each student.

465. Religion in Postwar America
(3-0-3) Yamane
This course surveys the major developments in religious life in the United States since the 1950s through an in-depth examination of several of the most important recent books on the subject, such as: Wade Clark Roof’s Spiritual Marketplace, Tom Beaudoin’s, Virtus Faith: Christian Smith’s American Evangelicalism, and Helen Berger’s A Community of Witches. With these works as the backdrop, each student will research and write her family’s religious history across three generations.

466. Sex Inequality in the Workplace
(3-0-3) Cassier
This course will examine sex inequality in the workplace in the United States. We will review evidence of sex differences in access to jobs and job rewards and try to understand the origins and persistence of inequality in the workplace by examining the roles of capitalism, male workers and employers, organizational practices, and women’s actions and preferences. Finally, we will evaluate policy strategies to reduce inequality.

467. Global Food Systems
(3-0-3) Johnson
This is a course on food in society. The role which food plays in the life course of a society may seem self-evident or commonplace to some. Yet food is more than the physical substances which sustain life. Food is intertwined with religion and central to many rites and rituals. Food is linked to medicine, which was largely based on dietary principles until well into the 18th century. Technology related to production of food has affected the inequalities found in all societies. The politics of food plays a major role in understanding the “social issues” affecting many nations around the globe. This is a fascinating area of study: that which we take for granted so much of the time is intertwined with economics, politics, psychology, social life and law.

470. Materialism and Meaning in Modern Life
(3-0-3) Halton
In the 20th century, the twin problems of meaning and materialism have come to the forefront of modern civilization, forming the basis of variety of philosophies and social theories, animating revolutionary movements in art, looming as the silent specter behind mass society and its dramas of consumption. It is by no means clear that the massive technological advances and material gains in advanced industrial societies have contributed to a better way of life—many would say increased meaninglessness is the actual result.
471. Protests, Riots and Movements
(3-0-3) Myers
This course is concerned with how people act together to pursue collective political aims via extra-institutional forms of behavior. When and why do people go outside the conventional political structure to address social issues important to them? During the course we will examine political behavior ranging from the relatively mild (like a letter-writing campaign) to the severe (like rioting, looting and killing). We will also discuss aspects of collective behaviors that are less political in nature (like panics and fads). Some of the social movements we will discuss include the civil rights movement, the women’s movement, the antiwar movement, the gay and lesbian movement, the pro-life and pro-choice movements, and the environmental movement (among many others). In the end, we will try to explain how grievances, resources, the political environment, repression, individual decision making, and movement tactics all contribute to the success and failure of protest movements, their impact on social change and the future of activism.

473. Latinos in American Society
(3-0-3) Cárdenas
This course will examine the sociology of the Latino experience in the United States, including the historical, cultural and political foundations of Latino life. We will approach these topics comparatively, thus attention will be given to the various experiences of a multiplicity of Latino groups in the United States.

474. Society and Identity
(3-0-3) Weigert
This course looks at sources, dynamics, and consequences of identity in contemporary society. Identity is conceived as definitions of an individual that self and others use as a basis for interacting with one another. Significant outcomes of the way we are defined are the life chances, evaluations and emotional meanings we experience. The course format is a discussion seminar.

476. Social Breakdown in American Society
(3-0-3) Welch
This course examines the apparent weakening of the fabric of social life in America that has occurred within the past half-century. It investigates the past influences of both the market economy and the political welfare state on several central societal problems, such as the deterioration of interpersonal trust, the erosion of social obligations and informal social control, and the lessening of altruistic concern for others. Students will discuss the significance of these problems, as well as potential solutions.

477. Families and Their Interrelations with Gender
(3-0-3) Aldous
A consideration of the part gender plays in family processes like the couple formation through co-habitation and/or marriage, having and rearing children, division of labor and the post-children era.

478. Chile in Comparative Perspective Seminar
(3-0-3) Valenzuela
This course provides a detailed analysis of the development of the Chilean economy, society and polity since independence from Spain in 1818, drawing selected comparisons with other national experiences. It then discusses the validity of theoretical statements on central questions in the social science literature by examining them in light of the Chilean case. The main issues to be examined are the reasons for the successes or failures of Third World development, the origins and breakdowns of democracies, the characteristics of authoritarian regimes, and processes of redemocratization.

479. International Migration and Human Rights
(3-0-3) Bustamante
This course is an extension from the mini-course to a full term offered by Professor Bustamante, with a wider coverage of international migration experiences in the world with an emphasis on human rights. It starts with a historical approach to various immigration waves to the United States, from the years of the “industrial revolution” to the present. It focuses on the current debate on the impact of the undocumented immigration from Mexico and Central America, with a discussion of the gap between public perceptions and research findings. Differences between Mexico and the United States’ migration policies, and its social and economic implications, are discussed. The recent developments within the context of the United Nations’ Commission of Human Rights on the relationship between migration and human rights are also covered.

480. Qualitative Methodology
(3-0-3) Cárdenas
The seminar will cover the general topic, with particular attention to ethnography and field work, visual methods, archival research and related strategies. Heavy emphasis will be placed on cross cultural research in minority communities in the United States.

481. Research Seminar in Latino Studies
(3-0-3) Cárdenas
Study of the scope, focus and development of Latino Studies. The course will concentrate on the development of social thought and scholarship, focusing on Latino Studies as a field of research and academic concentration. The course will also examine the social construction of contemporary Latino identities and its bearing on Latino Studies.

482. The Latino Image in American Films
(3-0-3) Cárdenas
This course traces the historical depiction of Chicanos, Mexicanos, Puerto Ricans, Cubans, and other Latinos in Hollywood-made movies. Cinematic plots, roles, and motifs — from the earliest of silent films through the onset of the 1990s—are examined to explore the changing physical, social, and cultural definitions of Latinos in the United States. All films and filmmakers are considered within their historical context. Though the main object of study is the Latino image, the course also surveys corresponding images for other ethnic minority groups.

483. Social Demography of Minorities
(3-0-3) Cárdenas
This course will focus on the demographic status of ethnic minorities in the United States. Some of the major topics include population size and projections, geographical distribution, and residential patterns. Other issues are educational attainment, occupational status, and personal and family income. The course will cover the basics of demographic methods and techniques.

484. Primary Data Collection and Survey Methodology
(3-0-3) LeClerc
This course will be offered to students in Sociology and other social sciences who have an interest in the design, implementation, and use of social surveys and databases in social science research. The course will include all practical aspects of survey design including sample design and selection, questionnaire design, measurement, mode of administration, field methods, data editing and data base development. We will also cover theoretical developments in survey methodology including research on cognitive process and questionnaire response, the role of social theory in questionnaire design and other specialized topics. This course will prove useful for both conducting primary data collection and interpreting data from secondary sources. Previous coursework in research methods and statistics will be helpful but not required.

485. Materials and Methods of Demographic Analysis
(3-0-3) LeClerc
This course is a survey course in techniques widely used in demographic analysis. These techniques include those that describe population structure, analyze demographic dynamics and evaluate demographic data. In addition, many of the analytic skills and techniques stressed throughout the course have more general applicability in social science research. The aim of the course is to acquaint students with the nature and structure of a variety of techniques and to provide you with the experience in applying those techniques.
The Instructor.

500-level graduate course with the permission of Graduate Courses.

Written reports reflecting deeper theoretical and practical involvement in the field, leading to the production of oral and written scholarly paper, or special investigative experience within the field.

Intensive study on a special topic to produce a substantial comprehensive written report. Prerequisite: Permission of instructor.

497. Independent Study

(V-V-V) Staff

Prerequisite: Permission of instructor.

Intensive study on a special topic to produce a scholarly paper, or special investigative experience in the field, leading to the production of oral and written reports reflecting deeper theoretical and empirical understanding.

Graduate Courses. Senior majors may take any 500-level graduate course with the permission of the instructor.

491. Social Transformations and Democratization in Chile

(3-0-3) Valenzuela

This course provides a comprehensive view of the social, cultural, and political transformations that have taken place in Chile since 1990. These transformations have been affected by the consolidation of democracy and the rapid pace of economic growth and modernization in the country. The course draws comparisons to the same processes that have occurred in recent years in Central and Eastern Europe.

496. Sociology Internships

(3-0-3)(V-V-V) Power

This is an “experiential” course designed to give students some practical experience in the area of urban affairs or social welfare either to test their interest, complement their academic work or acquire work experience preparatory for future careers. Students are placed with a community agency in the South Bend area and normally work six hours a week as interns under the supervision of an experienced practitioner. Hours are flexible, usually set to accommodate the intern’s availability and the needs of the host agency.

497. Independent Study

(V-V-V) Staff

Prerequisite: Permission of instructor.

Intensive study on a special topic to produce a scholarly paper, or special investigative experience in the field, leading to the production of oral and written reports reflecting deeper theoretical and empirical understanding.

Graduate Courses. Senior majors may take any 500-level graduate course with the permission of the instructor.

The Theology Program

University of Notre Dame

Why major in theology?

Some students study theology to prepare for a career in high school teaching or religious ministry. Others plan to proceed to graduate work in theology or religious studies in anticipation of a university career. Most students, however, major in theology simply because they find the study fascinating and rewarding. As an inherently interdisciplinary field, theology is an ideal liberal arts major. Through close study of influential theological and religious texts, rituals and artifacts, students learn about their own faith and our common culture.

Many other students elect theology as a supplementary major whose focus on the central questions of human existence complements and extends their commitment to their first major in science, engineering, business or architecture. Professional schools increasingly appreciate how such diverse and balanced preparation enhances a candidate’s profile.

The Department of Theology welcomes students pursuing these varied interests and goals. Its distinguished faculty boasts outstanding teachers who offer upper-division courses on a wide range of subjects, including the history of Christian thought and practice, scripture, spirituality, systematic theology, liturgy, ethics, Judaism and the Eastern religions. The smaller class size of most upper-division courses creates a conducive environment for the creative exploration of ideas.

What are the requirements for the theology major?

Beyond the six theology credits required of every Notre Dame student, majors take 25 hours; supplementary majors take 19 hours. Each of these majors combines formally required courses and electives.
The formally required courses for the first and the supplementary major are identical and total 10 credit hours: the two-semester sequence in the history of Christian thought, an upper-division scripture course, and the one-credit hour Proseminar offered each spring, which introduces students to the variety of topics covered in the study of theology.

Remaining hours, chosen at the discretion of the student, are usually taken at the 400 level; advanced students, however, are often encouraged to take master’s-level (500-level) courses.

Summary of the major:
THEO 100 or 200 and 200-level course (University required courses)
THEO 395 and 396 — Christian Traditions I and II
THEO 401 or 411 — Upper-division scripture course
Electives (15 hours at the 400-level)
THEO 400 — Proseminar (one credit)

Including the University requirements, the major thus consists of 31 credit hours.

Summary of the supplementary major:
THEO 100 or 200 and 200-level course (University-required courses)
THEO 395 and 396 — Christian Traditions I and II
THEO 401 or 411 — Upper-division scripture course
Electives (nine hours at the 400-level)
THEO 400 — Proseminar (one credit)

Including the University requirements, the supplementary major thus consists of 25 credit hours.

What other programs are offered?
In cooperation with the Department of Philosophy, the Department of Theology offers a Joint Major in Philosophy and Theology. The joint major incorporates the formal requirements of a major in theology, with the exception of the Proseminar, and adds others. A full description of the new joint major is provided in a separate brochure available at the department office.

Students can also minor in theology. The minor requires 12 hours beyond the University requirement for a total of 18 hours. Any courses at the 200- and 400-level, as well as letter-graded courses at the 300-level, can be used toward the additional 12 hours. The minor in theology meets certification requirements for secondary school teachers in some states.

Whom should I contact for more information?
The director of the undergraduate program in theology would be happy to answer any additional questions. The director may be reached through the departmental office.

INTENSIVE WRITING REQUIREMENTS

The primary assessment tool for theology department courses numbered 401 and above is papers. Hence, all majors can expect to write the equivalent of 20 to 25 pages per semester in these courses.

Course Descriptions. The following course descriptions give the number and title of each course. Lecture hours per week, laboratory and/or tutorial hours per week and credits each semester are in parentheses. The instructor’s name is also included.

100. Foundations of Theology: Biblical/Historical
(3-0-3) Staff
This first course in theology offers a critical study of the Bible and the early Catholic tradition. Following an introduction to the Old and New Testaments, students focus on major pre-biblical developments in Christian life and worship (e.g., liturgy, theology, doctrine, asceticism), emphasizing the first five centuries. For details on emphases of individual instructors, see the Department of Theology Course Description Booklet or the departmental Web site: www.nd.edu/~theo.

180. Theology University Seminar
(3-0-3) Staff
This course, prerequisite to all other courses in the theology department, provides an introduction to the critical study of Scripture and to the theological development of Christian doctrine for the first six centuries. Successful completion of this course satisfies the first of the two University requirements in theology. For details on emphases of individual instructors, see the Department of Theology Course Description Booklet or the departmental Web site.

200. Foundations of Theology: Biblical/Historical
(3-0-3) Staff
See course description above.
For sophomores, juniors and seniors. For details on emphases of individual instructors, see the Department of Theology Course Description Booklet or the departmental Web site.

201. Foundations of Theology (Honors)
(3-0-3) Page
See description above.

BEGINNING COURSES

Prerequisite: THEO 100, 180, 200 or 201 for all courses numbered from 202 to 299.

209. Political Theology in the Bible and the Christian Tradition
(3-0-3) Park
Christian theological arguments have been used in political theory from the patristic age through the early modern period. For a millennium and a half, the themes of creation, fall, christology, the church, and eschatology, as well as appeals to various Old and New Testament texts, have dominated political discourse. Political theology (in the Christian context), then, refers to both the political teaching of the bible and the political thought of Christian theologians and thinkers. One of the main underlying themes of this course is to understand how we got where we are today regarding the issue of religion and politics i.e., the separation of Church and State as enshrined in the establishment and free-exercise clauses of the first amendment. In order to fully understand and appreciate the path that western civilization took on this issue, we will need to examine the political theology of some major Christian theologians and thinkers throughout the history of western civilization. With the political ascendancy of Christianity occasioned by the conversion of the Emperor Constantine, Christianity found itself holding the reins of political power. How the Church handled that power, and the theological and philosophical debates that lay beneath the issue—including the medieval debates over the extent of papal power—are a major topic of interest in this course.

In this course, therefore, we will examine the political theology of the Bible and the Christian tradition with special attention to the theological-political problem; i.e., the problem of the relationship between Christianity and politics. In addition to the theological issues mentioned above, this will require addressing subtopics and related themes such as justice, law, nature, convention, virtue, morality, coercion (especially with regard to heretics and unbelievers), political organization, leadership, sedition, and war, as well as the vitaly important issue of the relationship between reason and revelation. Approximately one-quarter of the course will focus on the political thought of the Bible. Augustine and Aquinas, because of their huge impact on the Church and western civilization as a whole, will also be the focus of a quarter of the course. In order to fully appreciate and understand these two great theologians, we will need to very briefly examine how they were influenced by classical political philosophers (Plato, Aristotle, etc.). The remainder of the course will focus on the works of other Christian thinkers and early modern political theorists (Marsilius of Padua, Machiavelli, Bacon, Hobbes, Spinoza, Locke) to see in what ways they utilized the Christian tradition and/or struggled against it. We will end the course with a class on religion and politics in the American founding.
216. Re-Membering Jesus
(3-0-3) D’Angelo

220. En/Gendering Christianity
(3-0-3) D’Angelo

This course is an introduction to feminist approaches to spiritual and philosophical traditions in the Christian West. Beginning from the pastoral and practical issues raised by gender assignments in the context of religious experience, it addresses ma-JOR topics of theological thinking (such as sin, salvation, images of God, and Christology) relating historical development and contemporary feminist re-readings. The approach is both critical (i.e., analytical) and constructive; the primary focus is on Christian and post-Christian theological and literary texts, but some attention is given to other religious perspectives.

221. God’s Grace and Human Action
(3-0-3) Wawrykow

What are the respective roles of God and the human person in salvation? Are ideas of human freedom and of the value of human acts compatible with a belief in God as the source of grace and redemption? These and other questions about salvation have been hotly debated by Christian theologians throughout the centuries. This course analyzes the positions articulated by such figures as Augustine, Aquinas, Luther and Calvin, and examines how they shaped the Catholic-Protestant debate about the role of good works, and of God, in salvation.

222. The One Jesus and His Many Portraits:
The Various Images of Jesus
In the New Testament and Beyond
(3-0-3) Meier

This course explores the many different faith-portraits of Jesus painted by various books of the New Testament: e.g., from suffering servant abandoned by God through high priest interceding with God to Godself. In each case, the course will ask how this particular portrait did or did not have an impact on subsequent Christian faith and what it may say to faith in Christ today. The course will combine a lecture format with discussions, readings, and reflections on the readings.

224. Why God Became Human
(3-0-3) Zachman

This course will investigate historically and systematically the central Christian confession that God became human in Jesus of Nazareth, especially in light of the death of Jesus on the cross. We will consider theologians from the patristic to modern eras, including Irenaeus, Athanasius, Anselm, Luther, Pascal, Barth, and von Balthasar. Course requirements will include four six page comparative papers and a longer constructive paper.

225. Sin and Redemption
(3-0-3) O’Regan

This course explores the biblical and theological accounts of sin and redemption. Focus will be on the variety of perspectives in the biblical and theologenical accounts with regard to the meaning of sin, its social and individual significance, and on the understanding of redemption, its worldly as well as other-worldly dimensions, and its scale, whether inclusive or relatively exclusive. An attempt will be made to distinguish the biblical and theological views from the views of other religions both past and present, and also to engage modern criticism.

226ABC. Christian Hope: Confronting Last Things
(3-0-3) Daly

As individuals and as a world society, we tend to focus our energies on building a happy and secure future for ourselves; yet in a real sense we live surrounded by death, threatened by the impermanence of our relationships and by the fragility of life on our planet. A sense of this threat provides much of the background for human greed and vio-
ence, but it is also the context for human hope.
The heart of Christian faith is to hope for life in the face of death; it is to see a lasting value in our historical choices and loves, because Jesus is risen and because he promises us a share in his resurrection and his life. Christian hope can only be expressed in images, since what it refers to still lies in the realm of promise; yet the Christian believer can live from that hope now, can love in the freedom it affords, because the Holy Spirit has been given us by the risen Lord as “a foretaste of things to come” (Eph. 1:14). Through faith enlivened by the Spirit, we find in our present reality signs of a life without end that is, in a mysterious way, already ours. This course will study the details of this Christian hope for the future in its origins, development and implications. It will study “the last things”—death, judgment, purgation, heaven and hell—in both their individual and their social dimensions, as Christian theology has traditionally conceived them; and it will try to articulate an understanding of these objects of hope as they might best be integrated today into Christian thought and practice.
In addition, it will consider the ways that a Christian sense of the finality of salvation colors and influences all the other aspects of the intelligent reflection on faith we call theology.

227. Church and Worship
(3-0-3) Driscoll

An analysis of the Church as a community of believers and a social institution, and a study of Church liturgy and sacraments. This course will center around three key areas, namely (1) Anthropology. As humans, why do we feel the need to express ourselves and our relationship to God through ritual activity? (2) Theology. What are the Christological and ecclesiological underpinning for the sacraments? (3) History. What is the historical development of each of the seven sacraments?
What has remained constant in spite of the historical mutations?

228. U.S. Latino Spirituality
(3-0-3) Elizondo

U.S. Latino Spirituality is one of the youngest spiritualities among the great spiritual traditions of humanity. The course will explore the indigenous, African and European origins of U.S. Latino Spirituality through the devotions, practices, feasts and rituals of the people.

230. The Church We Believe In
(3-0-3) Proulx

From the New Testament on, the Christian com-unity has turned repeatedly to the formulation and description of its identity, essence and constitutional elements. Specifying what is entailed in the claim of the creed—“I believe in the one, holy and catholic church”—has been especially necessary at certain crucial moments in the history of the Christian movement.

Providing an introduction to the main themes and problems in ecclesiology (the doctrine about the Church), this course will examine the teachings of leading theologians in the Pastoral and Medieval period (e.g., Augustine; Aquinas; Luther) and the determinations of the last two Vatican councils, largely concerned with such ecclesiological matters as the constitution of the church, the role of the papacy, infallibility, and the universal versus local churches.

231. Catholicism
(3-0-3) McBrien

A comprehensive exposition of Catholic theology from a historical, doctrinal, and ecumenical perpective. The course addresses the following questions: the interrelationships among faith, theology, and beliefs; the meaning of human existence (a multidisciplinary exploration); the problem of God (revelation, religious pluralism, providence, the Trinity, etc.); Jesus Christ (New Testament data, doctrinal development, contemporary views, including a discussion of Jesus’ self-consciousness, sexuality, and sinlessness); the Church (New Testament data, history, Vatican II, mission, sacraments, authority, ministry, Mariology, etc.); and Christian existence (ethics, spirituality, eschatology).

232. Suffering and the God of Love
(3-0-3) Herdt

What does our suffering mean? And what does the central doctrine of the goodness of God mean in the face of the immensity of suffering in the world?
Is suffering a punishment for sin? A test of faithfulness? A source of growth? An inevitable byproduct of the finitude of creation, or of human freedom? Is suffering in this life wiped out by the joys of the life to come? Is it eased by our knowledge that Christ on the cross took our sufferings upon him-selves? Is God beyond all suffering, or does God suffer with us? Moving from the sufferings of Job to early Christian reflections on the destruction of Jerusalem, from medieval responses to the plague to modern attempts to fathom the Holocaust, taking in genres as varied as novel, treatise, and film, we will explore theological reflections on the goodness of God in light of human suffering.
232A. Spirituality of the Christian East: Experience, Form, Expression
(3-0-3) Alexopoulos
“Christianity is more than a theory about the universe, more than teachings written down on paper; it is a path along which we journey—in the deepest and richest sense, the way of life” (Kallistos Ware). This course will introduce the student to the Christian East and will focus on its spirituality as the expression of this “journey,” this “way of life.” The different experiences, forms and expressions of this spirituality will be examined and discussed during the course, having the writings of the Fathers of the Christian East as a basis, a foundation, and a springboard for further reflection.

234. Interpreting Suffering
(3-0-3) Thompson
Suffering, as it has been interpreted or experienced by theologians, mystics, martyrs, victims, and survivors, has profoundly shaped Christian theology. Focusing particularly on Christology and Christian discipleship, this course will consist of three parts. Part I will look at how some of the earliest teachings of the church developed out of a need to interpret authoritatively the suffering Christ and the suffering of the early Christian martyrs. Part II will consider the suffering of Christ as it was understood systematically and/or lived spiritually by key medieval and reformation thinkers. In light of these traditional theological responses to suffering, Part III will consider a variety of modern theological attempts to confront the radical human suffering of the 20th century. This course will have two goals: (1) to reflect on how theology talks about Christ and Christian discipleship in the face of human suffering; (2) to reflect on how experiences of suffering have shaped (and continue to shape) theological discourse. Requirements: 3 short papers (with opportunities for experiential learning), class participation, midterm, and final.

235. Following Jesus
(3-0-3) Daley
Hearing Jesus’ Gospel of the coming Kingdom of God, and receiving it as a word of truth and new life, has meant, since the time of Jesus, not simply accepting a new way of understanding the world, but taking on a new pattern of living, “costing not less than everything.” This course will consider how the Christian tradition, since the time of the Gospels, has understood the person and work of Jesus and will consider the impact this faith in him and in his message have had, and continues to have, on the way his disciples live in the world.

237. The God of Jesus Christ
(3-0-3) Baron
The purpose in this course is to study the Catholic-Christian understanding of God. The method employed is the reading of selected texts from some of the theological and spiritual masters of our tradition as well as from certain contemporary authors. The themes to be developed include the rootedness of the doctrine of God in the total event of the Incarnation, “proofs” for the existence of God in both classical and contemporary theology, the bipolar or tensive nature of divine attribution, the unique mode of causality which is creation, divine providence, the primacy of the divine name of Love, and the evolution of a formal doctrine of the Trinity.

240. Jesus and Salvation
(3-0-3) Hilkert
An exploration of the mystery of Jesus the Christ and the experience of salvation through examination of the life, ministry, death, and resurrection of Jesus (Part I); the development of classic Christian doctrine (Part II); and selected contemporary perspectives and questions (Part III).
242. The Mystery of God
(3-0-3) Doak
Who is the God Christians believe in? Beyond the acknowledgment that God is a mystery, accepted in faith and worshipped in reverence, what do Christians claim to know about God? How did the doctrine of the Trinity develop, and what difference does it make?
This course will explore these and related questions through study of the development of the doctrine of God in Christian theology, giving special attention to contemporary theological efforts to rearticulate the doctrine of God in response to the questions and issues of our own day. We will also consider the contributions of different theological approaches, especially those emphasizing the Bible, philosophy, spirituality, or socio-historical location as resources for better understanding the Christian experience of God.
Students will be encouraged to consult with the instructor about the possibility of an experiential learning project involving theological reflection on their own experiences of service, prayer, or worship as resources for better understanding God.

243. Theology of Marriage
(3-0-3) Odozor
This course seeks to introduce participants to the principal elements in the Catholic Tradition on marriage by examining the sources of this tradition in sacred scripture, the work of ancient Christian writers, the official teachings of the Church and recent theological reflection. The method employed in the course is thus historical, scriptural, and thematic. The readings selected for this course are intended to expose students to contemporary discussion in moral theology apropos of these issues, and provide them with the necessary theological tools to critically evaluate a wide variety of ethical positions dealing with marriage in the Catholic tradition.

244. Catholic Social Thought
(3-0-3) Pfeil
This seminar fulfills the requirement for a second theology course. It is for students returning from Summer Service Projects who desire an extended opportunity for reflection and analysis in addition to the regular SSP course (THEO 360, three credits, graded S/U). Some of the major themes to be discussed are: Christian compassion, discipleship, the mystery of God, and Catholic social teaching. The course culminates with a comprehensive research project on a theological question or issue that emerges from the summer and/or other service experiences and is explored with other academic disciplines. Students must have participated in a Summer Service Project during the preceding summer to enroll in this course. More information about the course format, the experimental learning method and the process of evaluation is explained in the Learning Agreement and Application Form, which is available at the Center for Social Concerns.

247. The Catholic Experience
(3-0-3) Cunningham
This course has three quite specific aims: (1) to describe that form of the Christian tradition both in doctrine and practice which is called Catholic; (2) to argue that within the Catholic tradition there are different "ways" of being a Catholic; (3) to outline a general way of being a Christian within the Catholic tradition; we will call that "way" a "spirituality.
Theology 247 will meet weekly for a lecture followed by discussion groups. Attendance will be required. Each week a short reflection paper (two pages) will be read aloud for the discussion section. In addition, there will be an essay-style midterm and final.

251. Liberation Theology
(3-0-3) Ashley
Liberation theology arose in the late sixties and seventies as many Christians in different parts of the world were becoming vitally engaged in various struggles for peace and justice. One of its central themes is the relationship between Christian spirituality and working for justice. This course will introduce liberation theology by focusing on this theological problem. Background will be provided by a historical survey of attempts to understand the relationship between contemplation and action, using patristic and medieval homilies on Lk 10:38-42, and concluding with an examination of the Ignatian ideal of "contemplation in action." Then we will examine how various theologians, including the Peruvian, Gustavo Gutiérrez, and Jon Sobrino from El Salvador, have tried to apply this ideal in regions lacerated by systemic injustice and torn by warfare. Requirements: frequent short (one-page) essays on readings, midterm and final. While not mandatory, community service in the South Bend area will be integrally worked into the course.

256. Christian Theology in the Middle East: Origins to the Present
(3-0-3) Amar
The spread of Christianity from Jerusalem to Asia Minor and Europe, and the development of Christian doctrine that followed upon it, is well documented and well known. Less well known is the movement of Christianity east of Jerusalem, and the developments of Christian doctrine that attended this movement. This course investigates the development of Christianity and Christian doctrine in the Middle East and Central Asia. This approach involves consideration of the central doctrines of the Christian faith (especially the doctrines of Christ, the Church, and the sacraments) from the time they were articulated in the period of the first seven ecumenical councils, to their development, in both continuity and contrast, in the churches of the East. Students will acquire a sense of the largely untold story of the origins and history of Christianity in the Middle East (a topic especially timely today), as well as a grasp of the fundamental Christian doctrines at stake in this history as well as the present, as they bear on the issue of the reunification of the churches. Readings include documents from the councils, relevant theologians, local history, native accounts, and archaeological evidence.

258. Creation: How God Relates to the World
(3-0-3) Brey
The course will explore the connections between one’s understanding of the world and one’s understanding of salvation and God by surveying some major representative treatments of the world that have emerged down through the ages. To better appreciate the uniqueness of the Judaic-Christian doctrine of creation, the course will begin by examining some ancient pre-Christian views of the world and salvation: Hinduism, Buddhism and the Greek-speaking world. We will then turn to look at the Biblical account of creation and its emerging treatment by some of the early church Fathers: Irenaeus, Origen and Augustine. Continuing, the course will jump forward in time so that we can survey the impact that modernity has had on the Christian doctrine of creation: the rise of science, Kant, Schleiermacher, Hegel and Barth. Also, in a less historical vein we will spend time considering what Paul calls “the last enemy,” namely death. To what degree is death an enemy of creation, and can the harsh reality of death really be reconciled with all our academic speculations? Finally, we will read some contemporary musings on creation by Robert Capon, J.R.R. Tolkien, and C.S. Lewis. The requirements for the course include daily readings, several short papers and an essay-oriented final.

260. Theology, Ethics, and the Environment
(3-0-3) McKenney
Does our ecological awareness require radically new theologies and moralities? What moral claims, if any, do nonhuman entities make on us? Can current Christian and philosophical moral theories address these claims? This course raises these questions on both theoretical and practical levels. Theoretically, we will examine various theological and philosophical views of the moral status of nonhuman nature. Practically, we will explore the implications of these views for issues such as wilderness conservation/preservation, treatment of animals, agricultural biotechnology, and others. The diversity of positions we will consider will range from those who embrace standard, modern human-centered theologies and moral theories to critics (such as deep ecologists, ecofeminists, and others) who hold that the very theoretical stance of our dominant theologies and moral theories is incompatible with a genuinely ethical orientation to the environment.

261. Christianity and Feminist Ethics
(3-0-3) Porter
This course is designed as an introduction to Christian ethics that focuses on the relevance of the historical Christian tradition to a specific contemporary issue or issues.
262. Contemporary Issues in Christian Ethics
(3-0-3) Poorman
The study of contemporary issues and Christian responses in the areas of bioethics, sexuality, social justice, and professional ethics.

264A. Sacraments of Vocation: Baptism,
Marriage, and Holy Orders
(3-0-3) Hennenberg
In the Roman Catholic tradition, marriage and holy orders have been treated together as "sacraments of vocation," while recent theological reflection and church teaching have emphasized how both flow from the call of baptism. This course introduces students to the history, liturgical celebration, and current issues surrounding the sacraments of marriage and holy orders. It presents marriage within the broader context of Christian commitment and holy orders within the context of Christian ministry and discipleship. Questions concerning church (What is the role of community in our relating to God?), sacrament (What are these realities imbued with the hidden presence of God?), and vocation (Who am I in God's plan for me?) and raised throughout the course.

265. Corporate Conscience
(3-0-3) Mertensotto, Heppen
This course is a reflection on the Christian moral meaning of corporate action and purpose within business organizations. It deals with an analysis of the relation between Christian values and corporate policy in order to raise the consequences of organizational policies. The objective is to develop a comprehensive corporate ethic, which deals with the self-interest of the organization, multiple responsibilities and a social vision for a more human world. For business majors.

266. Medical Ethics
(3-0-3) Mertensotto
A discussion of ethical problems in the medical profession in the light of natural law and Christian moral principles. For premed students.

268. A Faith to Die For
(3-0-3) Baxter
An introduction to Catholic moral theology, with an accent on how Catholic belief and practice shape the Church's understanding of the moral life. Aspects of Catholic belief and practice to be covered include baptism, penance, reading scripture, preaching, prayer, the Eucharist, martyrdom, religious life, marriage, and mission. In the context of these beliefs and practices, several leading themes in Catholic moral theology will be explored (e.g., sanctification, the eternal and natural law, and virtues and vices), and several moral issues will be examined (e.g., abortion, suicide, capital punishment, economic justice, and war and peace). This course explores an understanding of the moral life in terms of participation in the life, death, and resurrection of Christ, but at the same time it avoids construals of the moral life that rest merely on pious exhortations ("Jesus says"), assertions of ecclesial authority ("the Church says"), or invocations of negative moral prohibitions ("shou shall not"). Thus, the "faith" will be presented as a set of beliefs and practices that are disturbingly radical, demanding that Christians die to themselves, yet also deeply attractive, in that dying serves as a passegeway to true life. As suggested by the title, a leading emphasis in the course is that only a faith worth dying for can forge a moral life that is truly worth living.

Readings include selections from scripture, liturgical texts, theological and moral treatises, encyclicals, and the documents of Vatican II, plus Augustine's Confessions, Cantalamessa's The Eucharist: Our Sanctification, Graham Greene's The Power and the Glory, short stories of Flannery O'Connor, Dorothy Day's The Long Loneliness, and Helen Prejean's Dead Man Walking. Evaluation is based on a midterm, a final, several short papers, and interactive class participation.

269. Religion and Psychology
(3-0-3) Burrell
To show how the quest for psychological explanation can raise issues classically identified as religious, we will explore how the psychological articulation of these issues addresses the "task" of becoming a Christian. Beginning with Aristotle's Ethics to explore the most common idiom for human action, we jump to Kierkegaard's Sickness Unto Death, and then enter the "psychological revolution" with Sigmund Freud's Civilization and Its Discontents, followed by Carl Jung's Psychology of the Transference. By that time we will be ready to appreciate Sebastian Moore's The Crucified Jesus Is No Stranger, testing his work against two diaries: Ruzbihan Banli's Unveiling of Secrets: Diary of a Sufi Master, and Ertu Hillesem's An Interrupted Life. A series of exercises (one-page papers) are designed to help us learn the language of these authors. A final paper offers a way to link that language with more explicitly theological inquiry. A midterm (in two parts) and a final exam give opportunities for synoptic grasp.

272A. Sacraments/Sacramental Theology
(3-0-3) Wendlinder
This course is an introduction to the Roman Catholic Sacraments and Contemporary Sacramental Theology. The course curriculum is divided into three sections. The first section considers the history of the sacraments and the development of sacramental theology from the New Testament period through the Second Vatican Council and current reflections on the renewal of the sacraments resulting from the council. The second section examines sacramental practice within the Roman Catholic liturgy, and considers contemporary practice of sacraments in Christian faith traditions other than Roman Catholicism and the promises and challenges of an ecumenical perspective. The third section will explore the intimate role sacraments play in conversion and on-going conversion in Christian life.

273. Christian Call to Service and Justice
(3-0-3) Ashley
In this course, Christian leadership will be explored through presentations and readings from biblical, historical and contemporary perspectives on service, compassion, justice and community. There are specific requirements for participation in experiential and/or service learning projects which explore past and contemporary faith-based ways of bringing about a more just and humane world. The requirements for the course include short papers, reports, a midterm exam, and a comprehensive paper that explores a pastoral/theological issue or theme that is linked with the exploration of Christian leadership as vocation in response to contemporary social concerns and the Catholic social tradition.

275. The Mystery of Being Human
(3-0-3) Hilkert
This course will explore some key questions of human existence in relation to basic Christian beliefs about human life and destiny. What is the meaning of human dignity, personhood, and community in light of the Christian claim that we are created in the image of God and baptized into the image of Christ? How are we to understand the reality of evil in the world and the fundamental ambiguity of human experience in relation to the symbol of "original sin"? What do "graced human existence" and "relationship with God" mean? Do they affect the way we experience and live everyday life? How can Christians live in hope in the face of suffering and death?

279. Science and Theology
(3-0-3) Ashley
281. War, Law, and Ethics
(3-0-3) Pfiehl
282. Bioethics
(3-0-3) Ryan
This course explores the importance of religious and moral values for the life and death choices we make, individually and as a society. Basic principles and methods of contemporary bioethics will be introduced, and a range of issues considered, e.g., medical research, physician assisted suicide, health care reform, new genetic technologies, responding to AIDS. Especially recommended for students planning on a career in medicine or science. Lecture/discussion format. Requirements: short papers, midterm, final.
286. Literary Catholicism (3-0-3) Gordon
This course will explore the Catholic theological tradition primarily as it finds expression in six novels by authors whose writing is influenced by that tradition. The novels discussed will be: The End of the Affair and The Power and the Glory by Graham Greene, The Ball and the Cross by G. K. Chesterton, Silence by Shusaku Endo, Wise Blood by Flannery O’Connor, and Love in the Ruins by Walker Percy. Among the topics to be treated are Jesus Christ, revelation, the fall of humanity and the problem of evil, the nature of sacraments, and faith as a relationship with a loving God.

287. World Religions and Catholicism in Dialogue (3-0-3) Gorski
A theological exploration of Hinduism, Buddhism, Taoism, Judaism, Islam and the relationship of Christianity to those religions. The goal of this exploration is specifically (1) to set forth the essential characteristics of the world’s great religions, (2) to disengage the essential differences between Christianity and the other world religions, (3) to identify the distinctiveness of Catholicism within the family of Christian traditions, (4) to examine historically and systematically the Christian theological appraisal of other world religions. Thus, the course will enable the students to gain a deeper understanding of what is essential to Christian faith and practice as well as a greater appreciation of the spiritual paths of others. Requirements: Short papers, mid-term exam, and final exam.

290. Christianity and World Religions (3-0-3) Malkovsky
The purpose of this course is to introduce the student to the basic teachings and spiritualities of Hinduism, Buddhism, and Islam. We will approach these religions both historically and theologically, seeking to determine where they converge and differ from Christianity on such perennial issues as death, meaning, the nature of the ultimate Mystery, the overcoming of suffering, etc. We will also examine some traditional and contemporary Catholic and Protestant approaches to religious pluralism. Our own search to know how the truth and experience of other faiths is related to Christian faith will be guided by the insights of important Catholic contemplatives who have entered deeply in the spirituality of other traditions. By course’s end we ought to have a greater understanding of what is essential to Christian faith and practice as well as a greater appreciation of the spiritual paths of others. Requirements: Short papers, mid-term exam, and final exam.

292. Liturgy and Architecture (3-0-3) Brodhecker
Churches are not museums, but places where the people of God come together to worship. As the forms and theologies of worship change so must the buildings where worship takes place. In this course we will trace the past 500 years of liturgical and architectural changes in the Roman Catholic and Protestant.

308. Introduction to Christian Latin Sheerin

320. God, Philosophy, and Universities: Aquinas, Arnauld, Newman (3-0-3) Macintyre
Enquiry and teaching in Catholic universities have aimed at understanding how the universe—physical, animal, human—is ordered to God. One task of philosophy in the Catholic tradition has been to show how the various secular disciplines both contribute to such understanding and remain incomplete without theology. How is this task to be carried out? We shall consider answers by three Catholic philosophers in different intellectual and cultural situations, Aquinas, Arnauld, and Newman in the hope of learning how to answer this question today.

Requirements: Three papers will be required. There will be no examination.
(Crosslisted as PHIL 326.)

ELECTIVES

307A-307B. Elementary Hebrew I-II (3-0-3) Ulrich
Prerequisite: Six hours of theology.
This is a two-semester introductory course in biblical Hebrew; under normal circumstances, the student must complete the first to enroll in the second. The fall semester will be devoted to learning the grammar of biblical Hebrew. The spring semester will be divided into two parts. For the first six weeks we will finish and review the grammar. In the remaining part of the course we will read and translate texts from the Hebrew Bible, Qurran, and Rabbinic literature. The course will focus on developing reading and comprehension skills in biblical Hebrew through the study of biblical texts. In addition, students will learn how to use reference grammars, concordances, and apparatus to the Biblical Hebrew. The course encourages students to think about the grammatical forms and their implications for biblical interpretation.

325. From Power to Communion: Toward a New Way of Being Church-Based on the Latin American Experience (3-0-3) Pelton
Prerequisite: Six hours of theology.
This seminar explores the present and the future of the Catholic Church, placing emphasis on how its future is foreshadowed in the growing ecclesial interdependence that exists between the churches of North and Latin America. Emphasis is placed on the growing involvement of the laity in Latin America and where this may lead the North American church. In a particular way, attention is given to the role of small Christian communities.

340. Know Your Catholic Faith (series) (1-0-1) Cavadi
The department offers a series of one-credit courses in cooperation with the Office of Campus Ministry.

What does the Church teach? Why does it matter? Each one-credit course reflects on a central feature of the Catholic faith, so that students come away with a clear idea of what the Church holds on these topics as well as a basic theological and personal understanding of them.

347. Popular Religion and the Practice of Philosophy in China (3-0-3) Jensen
Prerequisite: Six hours of theology.
This lecture/discussion course will introduce the student to the plural religious traditions of the Chinese as manifested in ancestor worship, sacrifice, exorcism, and spirit possession. From an understanding of these practices, the course will offer insight into the mantic foundations of Chinese philosophy, especially metaphysics. Readings will consist of texts in translation of popular cults, as well as scholarly interpretations of these phenomena. In his Natural History of Religion (1757), David Hume articulated the now common distinction between high and low religion, identifying the monotheistic traditions (Christianity, Judaism, Islam) with the former and the polytheistic (the majority of the world’s religions) with the latter.
Social Concerns Seminars (THEO 350–THEO 372). The Department of Theology offers a variety of social concerns seminars in collaboration with the Center for Social Concerns. Permission is required for each of these and is obtained through the center. More information is available at the Center for Social Concerns, (574) 631-5319.

355. Soc Con Sem: Civil Rights and Social Change
(3-0-3) Caponigro
The purpose of this Seminar is to study key events and leaders that sparked the broad-based movement to secure civil rights in the United States. Students will visit communities (Atlanta, Birmingham) and religious institutions that shaped the ideology and development of movement in the late 1950s and early 1960s. Participants will also be asked to explore the current state of leadership in the civil rights community, assessing its relevance and potential for continued influence on issues of race and discrimination in the new century.

356. Soc Con Sem: Migrant Experiences
(3-0-3) Brandenberger
This Seminar offers a unique immersion into the lives of migrant farm workers in Florida during the spring harvest. Students pick tomatoes in the fields (donating their wages), live with migrant families, assist church and social agencies that serve migrants, and meet with community leaders, never again to take food for granted.

357. Soc Con Sem: L’Arche Communities
(3-0-3) Brandenberger
This Seminar centers around travel to a L’Arche community (e.g., Toronto, Canada) to share community life with developmentally challenged persons. Students draw from the philosophy of Jean Vanier, the works of theologian Henri Nouwen and other spiritual writings to augment this participatory learning experience.

358. Soc Con Sem: Children and Poverty
(3-0-3) Brandenberger/Ashley
This Seminar focuses on concerns that affect the youth of our nation, especially poverty and violence, and examines efforts to foster positive youth development. Immersion in New York City. Participants read Catholic social teaching focused on youth/family issues.

359A. Summer Service Learning: ACCION
(3-0-3) Cunningham/Connors
The ACCION Internships run 10-12 weeks in micro-lending offices across the country. For junior Business majors only.

359B. Smr SrvLmr Intnrn: ACCION
(3-0-3) Cunningham/Groody
The ACCION Internships run 10-12 weeks in micro-lending offices across the country. For junior Business majors only.

359C. Smr SrvLmr Intn: Hispanic
(3-0-3) Cunningham/Knight-Santoru/Groody
This is a leadership internship for Hispanic studies working 10-12 weeks in a Hispanic/Latino area with organizations dedicated to empowering local communities. Students will complete the requirements of THEO 379 and work with the Center for Social Concerns to build partnerships with the agencies and people involved. Application and interview necessary for participation.

359E. Smr SrvLmr Intn: Contemporary Issues
(3-0-3) Cunningham
This internship is for students interested in learning more about how the Catholic social teachings are addressed in the work of a church organization, such as the Catholic Campaign for Human Development.

360. Confronting Social Issues: SSPs
(3-0-3) Cunningham/Connors
This three-credit service-learning course takes place before, during, and after student participation in eight-week “Summer Service Projects” sponsored by the Center for Social Concerns. The goals of the course are to reflect on the meaning and dynamics of Christian service, compassion and Catholic social teaching through readings and writing, along with discussion and reflection with site supervisors and alumni, and scheduled group discussions upon return to campus. Writing assignments include a journal, reflection paper of six to eight pages and responses to study questions related to the course packet. This course is completed during the first five weeks of fall semester and is graded Satisfactory or Unsatisfactory. Acceptance is based on the student’s application and interview. Contact the Center for Social Concerns for more information.

360A. Confronting Social Issues: THEO
(3-0-3) Cunningham/Connors/Brandenberger
Same as THEO 360 but restricted to theology majors; graded A-F.

360B. Summer Service Learning: Int’l
(3-0-3) Cunningham/Tomas-Morgan/Kollman
Prerequisite: Domestic service-learning experiences. This three-credit course provides students the opportunity to encounter international realities through work with poor and marginalized people. Same academic requirements as THEO 360 with the addition of area/country specific readings and meetings.

360C. Summer Service Learning: NYSP
(3-0-3) Cunningham/Connors/Pettit
The National Youth Sports Program runs for six weeks on the Notre Dame campus. Students work with low-income children from the South Bend area in educational enrichment and recreation. Same requirements as THEO 360.

361. Soc Con Sem: Appalachia
(1-0-1) Ashley/Loesch
This seminar involves experiential learning during the semester break. The course is centered on a service-learning immersion in the region of Appalachia and provides preparation for and follow-up to that experience. Students may focus on particular themes (e.g., rural health care, environmental issues) at various sites while learning about the region and rural issues.

362/SOC 362. Soc Con Sem: Cultural Diversity
(1-0-1) Outlaw/Brandenberger/Pettit
The purpose of this course is to begin to analyze the positive aspects of ethnic and cultural diversity as well as related tensions, including racism. Students will participate in a five-day program during break at selected sites that provides an orientation to culturally diverse communities and allows students to engage in discussions on relevant issues with local residents and community leaders. Students participate in preparation and follow-up sessions.

363/POLS 496. Soc Con Sem: Washington, D.C.
(1-0-1) Brandenberger/Loesch/Ashley
This course centers on a trip to Washington, D.C., over fall break, during which time students analyze a significant social issue through contact with various agencies, government offices, and church organizations. Students participate in preparation and follow-up sessions. Themes (e.g., Educational Reform, Violence in America) vary each year.

366. Soc Con Sem: Mexico Service-Learning Project
(1-0-1) Brandenberger/Elizondo/Tomas-Morgan
This seminar involves three weeks of service-learning in Oaxaca, Mexico. It is designed to expose students to the reality of Latin America through inter-cultural exchange, shared work experience, and faith reflection. Students examine the social, cultural, and international forces operative in the region through discussion, relevant readings, and written reflection.

367. Soc Con Sem: Advanced Studies
(1-0-1) Brandenberger/Ashley/Beckman
Prerequisite: One other Social Concerns Seminar. The Advanced Studies Seminar is designed to enhance the students’ study and application of a particular social concern issue. The experiential component of the course will be tailored to the specific interest of the student and requires preparation and orientation, follow-up reflection and associated readings.

368. Soc Con Sem: Contemporary Issues
(1-0-1) Brandenberger/Ashley
This seminar allows students to participate in an experiential opportunity designed to examine contemporary social problems. Emphasis will be placed on understanding issues/conflicts from the perspective of the various participants. Preparation and follow-up sessions are tailored to the specific opportunity.
368A. Soc Con Sem: Discernment
(1-0-1) Shappell, Cunningham

369. Soc Con Sem: Leadership Issues
(1-0-1) Knight-Santonii/Brandenberger/Ashley
This course is open to student leaders of various campus organizations focused on community service and social action (e.g., student groups affiliated with the Center for Social Concerns, social concerns commissioners of dorms, etc.). This seminar will examine leadership and empowerment issues from a multi-disciplinary perspective, focusing on the role of the leader within organizations promoting community service, social awareness, and action for justice and peace. The course will provide students with an opportunity to examine and develop their personal leadership styles and potentials through a variety of experientially based learning experiences.

370. Soc Con Sem: Nonviolence
(1-0-1) Brandenberger
This course allows students to explore the theoretical dimensions of nonviolence and the practice of nonviolence as manifest in contemporary social movements. The course will examine the writings of Jesus, Mahatma Gandhi, Martin Luther King, Dorothy Day and others. Students participate in a one-week experience with faith-based communities involved in nonviolent activities, prayer, service, and public witness. A one-credit course graded satisfactory or unsatisfactory.

371. Soc Con Sem: International Issues
(1-0-1) Brandenberger/Tomas-Morgan/Kollman
This course revolves around international experiential learning opportunities, examining the culture, community and life of the people encountered, including the poor. Students participate in preparation and followup sessions.

372. Soc Con Sem: Field Education
(1-0-1) Brandenberger/Ashley
A directed field education experience in theology, augmented by readings and dialogue with faculty and others. Area of focus and placement determined by student interest and initiative, in collaboration with the Center for Social Concerns. Site placements may involve service-learning or related work (e.g., for example, La Casa De Amistad, the Center for the Homeless, or other site where the Center has placed a Community-Based Learning Coordinator). A learning agreement will outline specific learning tasks and requirements. Special permission (during the semester prior to the experience) is required.

376. Catechism and Catechetics
(3-0-3) Cavadinii
Prerequisite: Six hours of theology.

385. Islam: Religion and Culture
(3-0-3) Afsaruddin
This course will discuss the rise of Islam in the Arabian peninsula in the seventh century and its subsequent consolidation as a major world religion and civilization. Lectures and readings will deal with the life of the Prophet Muhammad, the Qur’an and its interpretation, early Islamic history, community formation, law and ritual, theology, philosophy, mysticism, and literature. Emphasis will be on the core beliefs and institutions of Islam and on the religious and political thought of its practitioners from the Middle Ages through our own time. The latter part of the course will deal with reformist trends within Islam and contemporary Muslim engagements with modernity. All readings are in English; no prerequisite.
(Crosslisted with MGLC 390/318.)

386. Canon and Literature of Islam
(3-0-3) Afsaruddin
Prerequisite: Six hours of theology. This course is an introduction to the religious literature of the Arab-Islamic world. Emphasis is on works from the classical and medieval periods of Islam, roughly from the seventh to the 14th century of the common era. We will read selections from the Qur’an (the sacred scripture of Islam), the Hadith literature (sayings attributed to the prophet Muhammad), the biography of the Prophet, commentaries on the Qur’an, historical and philosophical texts, and mystical poetry. All texts will be read in English translation. No prior knowledge of Islam and its civilization is assumed, although helpful.

388A. Chinese Mosaic: Philosophy, Politics, Religion
(3-0-3) Jensen
This is a special topics class that provides an introduction to the diverse life ways constituting the social puzzle of the Chinese people. The course will chart the terrain of contemporary Chinese imagination as it has been shaped by the overwhelming, often contentious, influences of religion, philosophy, and politics, introducing students to the heralded works of the Chinese intellectual tradition. Although the course will be on the core beliefs and institutions of Islam and on the religious and political thought of its practitioners from the Middle Ages through our own time. The latter part of the course will deal with reformist trends within Islam and contemporary Muslim engagements with modernity. All readings are in English; no prerequisite.
(Crosslisted with LLEA 388.)

388JE. Naming God in Three Abrahamic Traditions
(3-0-3) Burrell
This course, team taught in Jerusalem with Mustafa Abu-Sway and Alon Goshen-Gottstein, will explore the ways in which Jews, Christians and Muslims employ their revelatory tradition to name God—that is, to come to a way of understanding and relating to the One whom all three traditions believe freely created the universe. We shall explore how each tradition uses names differently, and so identify the relevant differences in these Abrahamic faith-traditions.

391. Liturgical Choir
(1-0-1) Walton

391A. Women’s Liturgical Choir
(1-0-1)

392. Folk Choir
(1-0-1) Warner

395. The Christian Theological Tradition I
(3-0-3) Cunningham
Prerequisite: Six credit hours of theology. A survey of Christian theology from the end of the New Testament period to the eve of the Reformation. Through the close reading of primary texts, the course focuses on the Christology of such influential thinkers as Origen, Athanasius, Augustine, Anselm and Aquinas. How do these thinkers understand the person and work of Jesus Christ? What are the Christological problems that they tried to resolve? How do the different Christologies of these thinkers reflect their differing conceptions of the purpose and methods of “theology”? Some attention will also be given to non-theological representations of Christ. How does the art of the early and medieval periods manifest changes in the understanding of the significance of Jesus? This course is obligatory for all first and supplementary majors, but is open to others who have completed the University requirements of theology and who wish to gain a greater fluency in the history of Christian thought. Fall only.

396. The Christian Theological Tradition II
(3-0-3) Herdt
Prerequisite: Six credit hours of theology. The course will examine the development of the Christian tradition from the time of the Reformation to the present, with special attention to the confessional division of the western Christian tradition during the Reformation, and the responses which post-Reformation Christian traditions make to the secularization of Western culture. The objective of this course is to develop an ecumenical understanding of contemporary Christian traditions. Class time each week will consist of two lectures and one student-led discussion. Evaluation will be based on discussion, four short papers, and a final exam. Spring only.
400. Proseminar
(3-0-3) Wawrytkow
Prerequisite: Six credit hours of theology.
This one-credit course will provide an introduction to the field of theology, emphasizing its nature and task, its relation to faith and experience, and its various methods of inquiry. Class sessions will have discussion format to promote close interaction among all the participants. Five sessions of the seminar will feature different members of the faculty who will discuss the goals and methods of their respective disciplinary areas. During the course students will gain the necessary background to begin planning their own programs in theology. Required for all majors and supplementary majors, and open to minor, pre-seminarians, and any other interested students. Spring only.

401. Hebrew Scriptures
(3-0-3) Ulrich
Prerequisite: Six credit hours of theology.
This course will offer students an introductory-level survey of the books of the Hebrew Bible, with emphasis placed on the holistic (i.e., theological, literary, and social-scientific) study of the history, literature, and religion of ancient Israel. The implications of selected texts in Christian and Jewish theological discourse will also be explored. Required course components include occasional quizzes, three unit tests covering the major divisions of the Hebrew Bible (Pentateuch, Prophets, and Writings), and 20 pages of writing spanning the following research-related genres (case studies, article reviews, journal, and critical notes). Fall only.

402. Archaeological Foundations of Christianity and Judaism in Antiquity
(3-0-3) Burgh
This course surveys ancient Israel/Palestine (the Holy Land) during the biblical period. The class will challenge students to think critically and creatively about the makeup/construction of previous cultures, their life-ways, and how the components of the culture connect and relate to one another. In order to do this, the student will engage and incorporate theory and method from several fields (e.g., archaeology, theology, anthropology, philology, textual studies, history, art, and others). This course encourages the student to use as many available tools as possible to investigate and understand the past and its impact on the present. The class will expose students to the material remains through slides and some physical artifacts that will assist them in better comprehending the theological foundations of Judaism and Christianity.

411. Christian Scriptures
(3-0-3) D’Angelo
A critical introduction to the Christian Scriptures for Western readers. In addition to important historical and literary aspects of the New Testament, this course aims to interpret those Scriptures in the light of the cultural world of Jesus. This means that readers will be learning the essential and relevant cultural models for reading Jesus, Paul, Timothy, etc., in their own culture: basic values (honor and shame), institutions (kinship), modal personality (group-oriented) and the like. Spring only.

423. Reformation Theology: A Survey
(3-0-3) Zachman
An examination of the development of Christian thought from the Council of Constance in 1415 to the First Vatican Council in 1869-70, with special attention given to the impact of the Reformation and the Enlightenment on the formation of Christian theology.

426A. Topics in Theology: Sacraments
(3-0-3) Prigl
Pastoral necessity as well as heresies and uncertainties about the nature of the sacraments made it unavoidable for the medieval church to reflect upon its most distinctive liturgical rites. Within the context of the formation and growth of scholasticism, the sacraments provided an excellent training ground to test the strength of western theological thought. Due to the influence of Peter Lombard’s collection of patristic “Sententiae” the sacraments finally became a major field within the institutionalized theology at the universities. Our course will focus on those events and texts of the earlier Middle Ages which challenged theologians like Paschasius Radbertus, Berengar of Tours and Lanfranc of Bec to specify their views about the Eucharist. It will consider the formation of a systematic treatise on the sacraments in the French schools of the 12th century, and finally present the synthesis of high scholastic sacramental theology in Thomas Aquinas and Bonaventure. Besides the generic questions on the nature of the sacraments as such, special attention shall also be paid to baptism, the Eucharist, confirmation and penitence.

428. Topics in Medieval Theology
(3-0-3) Staff

435. Christian Spirituality
(3-0-3) Cunningham
This course intends to introduce the student to (1) the methodologies for studying Christian spirituality; (2) some theological reflections on the Christian way of life “in the Spirit”; and (3) A consideration of the structure of some “schools” of spirituality within the Christian tradition. Apart from preparation of readings, class participation, and regular attendance, the basic course requirement will be to finish in a timely fashion the following series of short papers which will reflect topic assignments given by the professor. These short papers will bear a family resemblance to take-home examinations.

436. Modern Catholic Theology: Newman
(3-0-3) O’Regan
The course will focus on three of the major contributions made by John Henry Newman to modern religious thought. (1) Newman’s contribution to religious epistemology, that is, to the question of religious belief and whether it is irrational or rational to believe. A Grammar of Assent is central here, although other texts will also be taken into account. (2) Newman’s contribution to the understanding of the genesis, nature and function of doctrine. Our main text here is the famous Essay on Development which, arguably, is the single-most important text on tradition written in the nineteenth century (3) Newman’s view of Christ. Unlike his reflections on religious epistemology and his view of doctrine, Newman does not have a single authoritative treatment of Christ. His reflections are scattered throughout his writings, especially in his sermons and his historical works. We will read samples of both to discern the main drift of Newman’s concerns and his conclusions.

437A. Miracles
(3-0-3) Cavallini
What is a miracle? Can miracles happen? What is their significance? The course will approach these questions using a variety of paradigms, including philosophical, theological, and sociological. We will consider a variety of texts and issues, including the Bible, classical exegeses of biblical miracle stories (in Origen, Augustine, and Gregory the Great) as well their counterparts in modern scholarship, philosophical debates about the status of the miraculous, and recent studies of communities where miraculous events are alleged to have occurred. We will also consider the canonical process for the investigation of alleged miracles, as well as literary treatments of the theme. We will ask, finally, What is the religious significance of wonder?

441. The Christian-Jewish Encounter: From Disputation to Dialogue
(3-0-3) Signer
In the closing days of the II Vatican Council Nostra Aetate (Declaration on non-Christian Religions) reversed a negative attitude of the Catholic Church toward Judaism and the Jewish people. This remarkable change promoted “dialogue” with Jews, and positive changes in the ways in which Judaism was presented in Liturgy and Catechesis. Reactions from the Jewish communities were diverse: from rejection to welcoming.

This course will explore a number of issues which emerge from the history of Christian thought and theology. How did a negative image of Judaism develop within Christianity? In what ways did these unfavorable teachings contribute toward violence against the Jews? What is the relationship between Christian anti-Jewish teachings and Antisemitism? Is there any correspondence to Christian hostility within Judaism? In what ways have Jewish authors reacted to Christian tradition?
We shall also want to construct a more positive theology for the future. How can Jews and Christians develop religious responses to modernity? In what senses can a study of Judaism by Christians, or Christianity by Jews, help either community to understand itself better? How can Christians and Jews develop a theology of “the other” which is not triumphalist, but empathic.

442. Theology and Medicine
(3-0-3) Ryan
Prerequisites: Six hours of theology.
An examination of moral problems in medicine in the context of key theological themes, e.g. creation, providence, the nature of Christian personhood, suffering and redemption, freedom and grace. Various normative problems will be explored, e.g. physician-assisted suicide, artificial reproduction, and access to health care.

443. Jewish Spirituality
(3-0-3) Wolfson
This course will explore several central themes that have informed the texture of Jewish spirituality through the ages. Topics will include: liturgy and iconic visualization of God; sacred space and time on ritual performance; letter meditation and the magical imagination; contemplation and mystic union; textual study and inspired excesses; divine suffering and messianic redemption. Material will be selected from biblical, apocalyptic, rabbinic, and kabbalistic sources.

(445. Christian Initiation and Eucharist
(3-0-3) Johnson
The Rites of Christian Initiation (Baptism, Confirmation, and First Eucharist) and the Eucharistic Liturgy as the primary sacramental celebrations of and in the Church: their biblical and anthropological foundations, historical and theological evolution, and contemporary forms and celebration in a variety of churches. Requirements will include short papers and exams.

449. Feminist and Multicultural Theologies
(3-0-3) Hilbert
An exploration of critical and constructive contributions of women to the development of contemporary Christian theology. Using the writings of feminist, womanist, Latina, mujerista, and Asian women theologians, the class will consider recent work in the field of systematic theology with particular attention to questions of method, theological anthropology, Christology/soteriology, and the mystery of God.

450. Theology and History of Christian Missionaries
(3-0-3) Kollman
This course will study the missionary activity of the Church. After a brief look at mission and evangelization in the New Testament and the early church, we will then explore several important moments of missionary contact in the Americas, Africa, and Asia in the modern (post-Columbian) period. The course will conclude with a look at contemporary missionary practice and theory.

453A. Death and Rebirth
(3-0-3) Dunne
A course on the spiritual journey through the ages: the figure Gilgamesh (the human quest of eternal life), the figure of Socrates (the sense of a deeper life that lives through death), the figure of Jesus (the I and thou with God in Christianity: how this leads to an understanding of death and resurrection, or Incarnation and Trinity), Dante and the spiritual journey (the Christian sense of a life that lives on both sides of death), Kierkegaard and the eternal self (the Christian encounter with the modern sense of selfhood), and a concluding vision (the experience of the presence of God). Requirements include a midterm and a final exam (take home exams) and a personal essay.

456. Martyrs and Monastic Lives
(3-0-3) Leyerle
Early and medieval Christian communities were largely defined by their views not only of God or the personhood of Jesus, but also of the body; under fierce debate were questions of what, when, or even whether, to eat, drink, or engage in sexual activity. By reading intriguing texts stemming from the experience of martyrdom and monasticism, this course will illustrate how often explicitly theological concerns (for instance, an understanding of the incarnation) have their roots in just such pressing social concerns. Christians were further urged to ponder the relationship of the body to theology, by the experience of sporadic persecution launched against them initially by pagans, but after Constantine, increasingly by other groups of Christians. This course will examine a selection of intriguing texts stemming from the experience of martyrdom and monasticism. We will begin with the earliest portrait of Christians left to us, namely that found in the New Testament, and will end with the Reformation period, which not only saw a reassessment of the goals and goodness of the monastic life but also a resurgence of persecution. Two further and related concerns will also shape this course, namely, the uncovering of the contours of “ordinary” Christian life in these periods, and a growing appreciation of how Christian women, whose stories have often been eclipsed in surveys devoted to intellectual or doctrinal history, have shaped Christian tradition through their ascetic practices, and have been in turn shaped by them. Our perspective will be that of social historians.

459. Love and Sex in the Christian Tradition
(3-0-3) Porter
Christian reflections on sexuality comprise one of the richest yet most controversial aspects of the Christian moral tradition. In this course, we will examine Christian sexual ethics from a variety of perspectives through a study of historical and contemporary writings. Topics to be considered include Christian perspectives on marriage and family, the ethics of sex within and outside of marriage, contraception, divorce and remarriage, and homosexuality. Course requirements will include four or five short papers and a final examination.

460. Joint Seminar in Philosophy and Theology: Aquinas and Scotus on God
(3-0-3) Wawrykow

469. After the Abyss: Christian and Jewish Theology after the Holocaust
(3-0-3) Signer
At the close of the 20th century, Jews and Christians have become aware that the Nazi Holocaust presented significant challenges to their traditional theologies. For many Jews the problem arises from the question “How could God have permitted the murder of innocent children?” Many Christians, Catholic and Protestant, have raised different issues: “How could Christianity have given up its moral authority to the State and remained silent; what beliefs within the Christian tradition may have contributed to the contempt of Jews and Judaism?” Both communities have produced new explorations of the role of God in human history. In our course we will read both Jewish and Christian theologians. Jewish theologians such as Martin Buber, Arthur Cohen, Emil Fackenheim, Emanuel Rackman and Irving Greenberg will be read along with some of the writings of more traditional Jewish theologians. From the Christian perspective we will read from the writings of Johann B. Metz, Jurgen Moltmann, Karl Barth, David Tracy and Paul van Buren.

471. The Development of Latino Christianity in the USA
(3-0-3) Elizondo
The development of religion in the great “frontera” between Nordic America and Latin America, which is in the southwest of the USA.
Supplementary Majors, Minors, and Special Programs

As indicated above, a supplementary major is one that cannot stand alone in qualifying a student for an undergraduate degree but must be taken in conjunction with a primary major. Several departments offer both majors and supplementary majors. They have been described above. Included below are interdisciplinary non-departmental supplementary majors and minors.

AFRICAN AND AFRICAN AMERICAN STUDIES SUPPLEMENTARY MAJOR AND MINOR

Program of Studies. The African and African American Studies Program (AFAM) is dedicated to the interdisciplinary study of the peoples of Africa and the African Diaspora. Its pedagogical commitment is twofold: (1) to create a disciplined and rigorous intellectual environment within which the study of the histories, literatures, languages, and cultures of African and Afro-diasporan peoples can take place; and (2) to foster an appreciation of the richness, diversity, and complexity of the African-American experience—particularly when it is viewed within both national and global contexts. Critical inquiry and service learning are essential components of the AFAM Program. It seeks to create opportunities for dialogue, reflection, and social engagement within and beyond the classroom. The AFAM Program offers Notre Dame undergraduates the option of electing a Supplementary Major (24 credit hours of required coursework) or Interdisciplinary Minor (15 credit hours of required coursework, with a sub-speciality in Literature, History, or Social Science). Students selecting either option receive thorough grounding in the analytical methods employed by scholars in the field as well as exposure to essential sources and critical issues. A “capstone” experience consisting of a Senior Project or Thesis rounds out the curriculum for the Supplementary Major.

Upon completion of all requirements, students will have received both a solid introduction to the discipline of African and African-American Studies and an appreciation of how it interfaces with other areas in the Humanities, Social Sciences, and Theological Disciplines.

Supplementary Major

The AFAM Supplementary Major requires completion of one designated literature course (3 credit hours), the two course sequence in African-American History (6 credit hours), one stipulated Social Science course (3 credit hours), and the Senior Project or Senior Thesis (3 credit hours). Three additional AFAM elective courses in Literature, History, or Social Science can be selected (9 credit hours) to complete the 24 credit hour requirement.

Literature

Majors must take one of the following courses.

AFAM 384a: Afro-American Literature I
1746-1900
AFAM 384b: Afro-American Literature II
1900-1940
AFAM 384c: Afro-American Literature III
1940-present
AFAM 384e: AFAM Literature and Contemporary Issues

The following courses are considered AFAM Literature electives.

AFAM 324: Harlem Renaissance
AFAM 419C: African-American Poetry and Poetics
AFAM 379a: African Literature
AFAM 413: Art/Poetics Richard Wright
AFAM 470b: Joyce and Baldwin
AFAM 479a: Modern African Literature
AFAM 494b: Writing Whiteness
AFAM 494e: Slavery Era Afro-American Literature
AFAM 591 (grads only): Politics and Literature in Francophone Sub-Saharan Africa

History

Majors are required to complete the two-course sequence in African American History.

AFAM 270: Civil Rights Movement
AFAM 371: Survey of African-American History I
AFAM 372: Survey of African-American History II
The following courses are AFAM History electives.

AFAM 321: Making of Multicultural America
AFAM 328: Famine in Africa/Ireland/India
AFAM 380: U.S. Labor History
AFAM 444: African History Since 1800
AFAM 453: The New Nation
AFAM 454: Era of U.S. Civil War 1846-1877

Social Science
AFAM majors are required to take the following Social Science course.

AFAM 372a: The Archaeology of Africa

The following courses are AFAM Social Science electives.

AFAM 215: Education, Multiculturalism, and Democracy
AFAM 221: Introduction to Jazz
AFAM 232: Social Problems
AFAM 302: American Social Experience: Traditions of Protest
AFAM 306: Homefronts During War
AFAM 311: Race/Ethnicity and American Politics
AFAM 319: Sociology of Sport
AFAM 322: Black Music, World Market
AFAM 329: Fundamentals of Human Evolution
AFAM 332: Criminology
AFAM 336: Human Diversity
AFAM 336a: Poverty/Inequality/Social Strategy
AFAM 338: Poverty/Inequality/Social Strategy
AFAM 352: Politics of Southern Africa
AFAM 359: Peoples of Africa
AFAM 401: Immigration, Ethnicity, Race in the U.S.
AFAM 422: Race, Gender, and Women of Color in American Culture
AFAM 428: Famine in Africa/Ireland/India
AFAM 429: Making of Multicultural America
AFAM 432: Ethnicity in America
AFAM 438: Ethnicity in America
AFAM 439: Jacksonian America
AFAM 444: American Social Experience: Traditions of Protest
AFAM 447: African and Caribbean Women Writers
AFAM 448: African History Since 1800
AFAM 453: The New Nation
AFAM 454: Era of U.S. Civil War 1846-1877

History
In addition to the two required classes, any of the following History courses may be taken as AFAM electives.

AFAM 312: Slavery in Antiquity
AFAM 318: Making of Multicultural America
AFAM 319: African-American Poetry and Politics
AFAM 407: Joyce and Baldwin
AFAM 408: African Literature
AFAM 409: African-American Poetry and Politics
AFAM 413: Art/Politics of Richard Wright
AFAM 419C: African-American Poetry and Politics
AFAM 430: Famine in Africa/Ireland/India
AFAM 440: U.S. Labor History
AFAM 441: African History Since 1800
AFAM 442: African and Caribbean Women Writers
AFAM 443: The New Nation
AFAM 444: Era of U.S. Civil War 1846-1877

Literature
The following are AFAM Literature electives for the minor.

AFAM 324: Harlem Renaissance
AFAM 479a: African Literature
AFAM 419: Art/Politics of Richard Wright
AFAM 419: African-American Poetry and Politics
AFAM 470b: Joyce and Baldwin
AFAM 479a: Modern African Literature
AFAM 487: African and Caribbean Women Writers
AFAM 494b: Writing Whiteness
AFAM 494c: Slavery Era of African American Literature
AFAM 591 (by special permission): Politics and Literature in Francophone Sub-Saharan Africa

Interdisciplinary Minor
The AFAM minor offers students an opportunity to focus on one of three areas: Literature, History, or Social Science. Minors must take one of the following four AFAM Literature courses (3 credit hours).

AFAM 384a: Afro-American Literature I: 1746-1900
AFAM 384b: Afro-American Literature II: 1900-1940
AFAM 384c: Afro-American Literature, 1940-present
AFAM 384e: Afro-American Literature and Contemporary Issues

Minors must also take one of the following two History courses (3 credit hours):

AFAM 371: Survey of African-American History I
AFAM 372: Survey of African-American History II

Minors will choose one of the following three areas of specialization: Literature, History or Social Science. The remaining three courses (9 credit hours) will be in the area chosen.

AFAM 425: Ethnicity in America
AFAM 428: Race, Gender, and Women of Color in American Culture
AFAM 432: Blues in American Culture
AFAM 473: Christianity in Africa

Senior Project
The Senior Project (or Senior Thesis) is the capstone of the AFAM Supplementary Major. It provides seniors with an opportunity to reflect upon the larger implications of their coursework and, should they desire, to incorporate a service learning component. A written proposal describing the intended project or thesis must be submitted to the AFAM director for formal approval. If accepted, the student will be assigned a thesis director. A written summation of the project (or final version of the thesis) is due at the end of the term. An oral presentation must also be made to the director and Advisory Committee during the week of final examinations.

Gender Studies Supplementary Major and Minor

Director:
Kathleen Pyne
Sophie White

Administrative Assistant:
Tori Davies

Objectives. See page 229.

The Supplementary Major seeks not only to offer students additional knowledge about gender but also to shape their overall orientation toward learning. Through advanced coursework on gender, students gain the ability to negotiate traditional disciplinary boundaries and to attain a deeper understanding of the issues of central concern to all who study and work in the field of gender studies. Further, this habit of mind has a transformative impact on the entirety of academic life, making students more creative as they undertake work in their primary major and in other areas of the University.

Students who undertake the additional coursework of the Supplementary Major in Gender Studies gain a firm grounding in this rapidly developing field, which serves to make them attractive candidates to graduate programs and helps ensure their success should they choose to engage gender issues at an advanced academic level. Students who plan to enter the work force immediately after graduation will also benefit from the Supplementary Major in Gender Studies. As the demographics of the workforce have changed, a host of gender issues have emerged that are of pressing concern. The increased ability to think critically about gender will prepare students to engage these issues responsibly, making them valuable and productive in their future careers.
Supplementary Majors, Minors, and Special Programs

Requirements. Supplementary majors in gender studies must choose a faculty advisor. With their advisor, they draft a rationale for their second major and propose a general course plan. The Gender Studies Curriculum Committee reviews and gives final approval to this prospectus. The faculty advisor will meet with the student regularly to advise about course selection.

Course Requirements: Students in the Supplementary Major are required to complete 24 credit hours distributed as follows: GSC 101/201: Introduction to Gender Studies (three credits) — a course that is team-taught by members of the Gender Studies faculty and that maintains a crossdisciplinary approach; one three-credit critical methods course — a 300- or 400-level course whose chief focus is on theory and critical methods in the study of gender; one course that links questions of gender to issues of cultural diversity, such as race or class differences; GSC 495: Gender Studies Practicum (three credits) — a course that allows seniors to pursue independent research projects as well as experiential work on gender issues; four elective courses in Gender Studies (12 credits). At least one elective course must be in the humanities and at least one must be in the social sciences.

Courses: See page 229.

Arts and Letters/Science honors Program

In the fall semester of 1983, the University inaugurated an honors program for a small number of outstanding students in the College of Arts and Letters and the College of Science. A limited number of students with academic intents for each college are identified for this program at the time of admission. Although selection criteria include the promise of outstanding academic performance as demonstrated by standardized test scores and high school performance, the program is looking for more than mere academic ability. It hopes to identify students with a deep intellectual curiosity.

The program offers honors sections to fulfill most of the University and college requirements in the students' freshman and sophomore years. At present, there are honors sections of theology (THEO 201) and philosophy (PHIL 195), the two-semester honors seminar (satisfying the writing requirement — usually accomplished through English 109 — in the fall semester, and the literature requirement during the spring), chemistry, physics, mathematics, a social science, and literature. Since these courses are restricted to honors students, they are smaller than non-honors sections and are usually taught in a seminar format. The teachers for honors sections are chosen from the most outstanding teachers in each college. After the sophomore year, students’ academic work will be mainly centered in their major field of study, but two honors electives are also taken during these years. There is also an Honors Seminar in the fall of the senior year to bring the honors students from diverse majors back together for some topical discussions. All honors students will also be expected to complete a special six-hour senior research honors project in their major field of study. In science, this is the culmination of a research project that is begun earlier, and in arts and letters, it is a two-semester project culminating in a thesis. Those writing senior theses work individually under the direction of a faculty advisor of their choosing in their major field. Funds are available for research projects during summers either at Notre Dame or other universities.

In addition to the more narrowly academic features of the honors program, students will be offered various opportunities for broadening personal, cultural and spiritual growth. Regular colloquia, informal discussions and cultural excursions are available.

Further information on the structure and content of the honors program or on the criteria for admission may be obtained by contacting Prof. Alex Hahn or Prof. Cornelius Delaney, 210 O'Shaughnessy Hall, Notre Dame, IN 46556, (574) 631-5398.

Arts and Letters/Preprofessional Studies

Advisor:
Jennifer Ely Nemecek
Assistant dean
College of Arts and Letters

Program of Studies. Arts and Letters Preprofessional Program students are required to complete an arts and letters primary major in addition to the preprofessional supplementary major. The ALPP program provides students who intend to pursue a career in health science with an opportunity to complete a major in the College of Arts and Letters while building a firm foundation in the basics of science. Most students elect the ALPP program because they wish to go on to medical or dental school; however, there are students who intend to pursue other health-related careers or simply prefer the integration of science classes into the arts and letters curriculum. Medical schools encourage prospective applicants to seek a broad, liberal education, which enables them to develop skills that will be useful throughout life. The ALPP program provides students with all of the necessary prerequisites to prepare for the Medical or Dental College Admissions Test.

Since the Medical/Dental College Admissions Tests are ordinarily taken in the spring semester of the junior year, students should have completed the following courses by that time: MATH 119-120, BIOS 201/L-202/L, CHEM 117/L-118/L, CHEM 223/L-224/L and PHYS 221/L-222/L. Students must also take three upper-level natural science electives (nine credits) to complete the ALPP program. The following electives are recommended to provide the student with the background necessary for admission to most medical and dental schools: Genetics (BIOS 303), Biochemistry (CHEM 420), Physiology (BIOS 344 or BIOS 421), Cell Biology (BIOS 341), or Microbiology (BIOS 401). Biochemistry (CHEM 420) and Physiology (BIOS 344 or BIOS 421) are strongly recommended.

All curricular advising in reference to the ALPP major is conducted by the ALPP advisor in 101 O'Shaughnessy. Advising in reference to the application process to medical and dental schools in the spring of the junior year is conducted by the science preprofessional chair in 329 Nieuwland Science Hall. All ALPP juniors are invited to a meeting in January of their junior year to introduce them to the medical/dental school application process. All ALPP supplementary majors are added to a listserve to announce upcoming meetings, seminars, summer internship opportunities and information on other health-related careers.

The sequencing of courses taken throughout the sophomore, junior and senior years is worked out by the student in consultation with the ALPP advisor and the student’s departmental advisor so that the best schedule for each individual is arranged. One possible sequence is the following.

Program of Studies. Computer Applications (CAPP) teaches the skills necessary to function in the uses of information technology. Its goal is to combine the diverse background of arts and letters with computer skills in a way that applies to a full realm of occupations and business fields. CAPP offers firsthand experience on applying classroom knowledge to actual business applications and focuses on a conceptual understanding of how to approach tasks using computer technology. Designed with the arts and letters student in mind, CAPP is a cross-disciplinary sequence of courses that provides students with employment opportunities, computer language experience, application experience in areas of choice and familiarity with state-of-the-art technology.

CAPP strives to demonstrate the relationship between computer technology and problem-solving and illustrate the value of computers in traditional areas of concern and interest.

With CAPP available only as a supplementary major, students must have a traditional field of study within the college. As its title implies, CAPP stresses the application of technology to organizational, institutional and interpersonal issues and problems. CAPP aims at giving students an understanding of how technology can be applied to diverse areas of life by giving them experience in applying contemporary technology to problem solving.

The actual courses offered vary from year to year, but the structure of the program can be outlined as follows:

Supplementary Majors, Minors, and Special Programs

243. Introduction to Computer Systems
(3-0-3)
As an introduction to Information Processing, this is a literacy course which explains computer systems including hardware, software, systems analysis and other related topics. The class learns some computer programming, logic, design and documentation using the BASIC language. The students also work on teams to learn some phase of the IS environment, learn multimedia software and make presentations to the class.

303. Statistics for the Professions (SOC)
(3-0-3)
This course is designed to teach students how to interpret and critically evaluate statistics. Social sciences as well as many areas of business use statistics to describe, project and evaluate data. The focus is on a conceptual understanding of the purpose of statistics, how to interpret them and what assumptions can be drawn from them. Students will work with one of a number of statistical software packages, usually SPSS.

304. Statistics for Economics (ECON)
(3-0-3)
The main objective of this course is to give you a working knowledge of statistics. This knowledge includes the ability to recognize which statistical technique or test applies in a given situation, how to perform the test, and how to draw the correct conclusions. What appear to the uninformed to be formulas are actually meaningful and important transformations. These transformations when properly understood do not require memorization but are remembered and expressed easily once their purpose and significance is fully understood.

308. Quantitative Political Research (POLS)
(3-0-3)
Students will learn to understand statistical techniques used in political science and acquire the skills to interpret the results. Mastery of these techniques is essential for understanding research on public opinion and voting behavior, electoral studies, comparative and international political economy, and many other topics. For each selected topic, students will read works on the key issues and debates and create their own spreadsheet programs to execute analyses. They will download and clean datasets used in the published research, replicate analyses from these readings, and write short papers evaluating the research.

315. Management Information Systems
(3-0-3)
Students are introduced to leadership and management skills in the information processing environment. Discussions on why and how management makes decisions are an important part of the course, as are discussions of current problems of management in the business world related to computer applications.
316. Systems Analysis and Design (3-0-3)
Administered in two major segments, this course first exposes students to the full scope of analyzing and designing computer systems by covering problem definition, data collection, documentation of existing systems and definition of new systems requirements. We use the methodology of Systems Development Life Cycle (SDLC). The second segment deals first with students working on genuine business projects. A part of this segment gets into object-oriented systems analysis, which is a new concept in systems analysis and design.

338. Democracy in the Age of the Web (POLs) (3-0-3)
This course focuses on the Internet’s potentially paradoxical impact on liberal democracy. We will consider both the positive contributions the Internet revolution may have upon our system of government and its possibly negative implications. Topics to be considered include the contending theory’s of the Net’s impact, the digital divide, the role of the state in cyberspace, the rise of the Net communities and new forms of social mobilization, authoritarianism in an age of virtual transparency, and various utopian and dystopian images of Web-based cultures.

365. Introduction to C++ (3-0-3)
Although many of today’s information systems are supported by COBOL programs, new development has migrated to object-oriented C++. If students majoring in Information Systems are to be competitive when they graduate, they need some competence working with the object-oriented paradigm and, in particular, C++.

367. Introduction to Java Programming (3-0-3)
Mostly known as a language of the World Wide Web, Java is also a versatile, object-oriented, general-purpose programming language. In only six years, with its “Write Once, Run Anywhere” feature, Java has earned its place as the most-used programming language. This course introduces Java as a general-purpose programming language, with World Wide Web applet examples. The approach will be hands-on, with the class conducted in a computer lab.

385. Artificial Intelligence (3-0-3)
Artificial Intelligence is the effort to create human intelligence in machines (computers). In this endeavor, we come to better understand the nature of intelligence. Along the way, we discover clever and ingenious solutions via computer science. We will consider various positions on AI ranging from strong support to total opposition. Topics covered are the history of AI, the Turing Test, the Chinese Room, state spaces and search, heuristics, games, knowledge representations and reasoning, expert systems, planning, neural networks, and program evolution.

The course proceeds through a progression of artificial intelligence systems or “agents” that react to their environment with increasing sophistication.

386. Chinese Pop Songs: Global/Local (LLEA) (3-0-3)
This course explores pop songs since the 1980s from China, Taiwan, and Hong Kong to examine various ways Chinese construct images of the self. As a means of analyzing the material and expressing their own viewpoint, each student will build a series of media-rich Web pages including clips from the pop songs introduced. Students will become proficient with Web authoring programs and streaming audio applications such as SoundForge.

389. Visual Basic (3-0-3)
Prerequisite: CAPP 243.
The course will investigate object-oriented data processing concepts using Microsoft’s Visual Basic Programming Language. Terminology and technique will be combined to explore the object-oriented paradigm. Object-oriented will be compared to traditional procedural paradigms wherever appropriate.

391. E-Commerce (3-0-3)
Electronic commerce is a system that includes not only those transactions that center on buying and selling goods and services, offering sales support and customer service, or facilitating communications between business partners. Electronic commerce builds on the advantages and structures of traditional commerce by adding the flexibility offered by electronic networks.

395. Applied Multimedia Technology (3-0-3)
Students learn to use several multimedia software packages, such as Director, Toolbook, Power Point and Persuasion. These, along with other forms of multimedia technology, can assist you with class projects, working with faculty and preparing presentation software.

400. Advanced Multimedia (3-0-3)
The Advanced Multimedia course will be using Macromedia Director to explore the development of Multimedia applications using an object-oriented approach. In addition to the object-oriented approach to development of complex projects, we will learn how to use net lingo and exploit the ability of director objects to communicate with one another across networks. Acquisition of media to be used in the creation of projects by digitizing and editing still images, audio, and video will be part of the course, and we will explore some advanced techniques in video editing.

405. Foundations of Business Thinking (3-0-3)
This course is designed to provide an integrated understanding of the foundational business disciplines of accounting, finance, marketing, and management, especially for CAPP majors planning a career in business. Fundamental leadership and consulting skills will also be addressed. Case analysis, coupled with a highly interactive format, will be employed to ensure practical exposure to today’s business environment. Primary areas of focus will address the critical elements for success in the corporate environment, the knowledge and preparation necessary to facilitate your interviewing process, and the business fundamentals for those with entrepreneurial aspirations.

413. The Computer as an Economic and Social Phenomenon (ECON) (3-0-3)
This course attempts an overview of the computer as a social phenomenon without committing to the viewpoint of a single discipline. We will survey the issue from historical, sociological, science-studies, and economic perspectives and will engage with developments from artificial intelligence to technological innovations, legal controversies, and political questions about the relationship of cyberspace to democracy.

457. Computer, Ethics, and Public Policy (STV) (3-0-3)
The profound impact computer technology has on society is difficult to overstate; it has changed the nature of our interactions in the social, economic and political realms and will continue to do so. These changes often raise important ethical questions about personal and professional responsibility, intellectual property, personal privacy, crime, and security. They also raise questions about the changing relationships between individuals and institutions (i.e., private sector corporations and public sector agencies). This course examines these trends and changing relationships, and the ethical issues that are faced by computer professionals, policymakers, and computer users in trying to grapple with them.

470. Ethics Practicum (0-0-1)
This course is for students who have difficulty fitting the 471 Computer Ethics or 475 Current Trends course into their schedules. This one-credit-hour self-directed readings course requires that students read material and write a 15-to-20-page paper dealing with an agreed-upon topic that deals with ethics in technology use.

471. Computer Ethics (3-0-3)
Restriction: CAPP seniors only.
The course concentrates on the theory and practice of computer ethics. To facilitate this study, students will first learn several UNIX utilities and such Internet applications as e-mail and listserv. Methodologies used in the course include in-class case analysis, in-class discussions, and examinations.
475. Current Trends
(3-0-3)
Restriction: CAPP seniors only.
This course involves discussions on new directions and developments in the information technology environment. Discussion of management, computer, and social ethical issues are integral parts of the class.

480. Computers in Psychological Research and Education (PSY)
(3-0-3)
CAPP 480, along with its counterpart in psychology (PSY 388), is a project-oriented class. It is not an introductory course on computer applications. Students need to already have (or learn during the semester) the skills needed to complete whatever project is defined. Generally, projects are applications or systems that fit into the broad spectrum of Professor Crowell’s interests in organizational psychology or learning and performance technology. Once a project is defined, students work on it over the course of the semester, reporting to Professor Crowell on a weekly basis. Since this is a three-hour class, students are expected to put in an effort equivalent to other three-hour courses. Planning and developing a functional application requires a considerable effort.

481. World Wide Web Programming
(3-0-3)
Prerequisite: Knowledge of some programming language, i.e., EG 120, CAPP 331, CAPP 361, CAPP 365, CAPP 389.
This course covers several languages which are used to construct sites on the World Wide Web. These languages are: (1) HyperText Markup Language (HTML), a scripting language used to control the format of Web pages; (2) JavaScript, an object-based scripting/processing language use to provide client-side interactivity for Web pages; (3) Java, an object-oriented compiled processing language which can create applets which are platform-independent.

482. Multimedia Design I (Art)
(3-0-3)
This advanced design course gives the studio or design major the opportunity to investigate digital interface design. Topics include multimedia CD-ROM development with Macromind Director, basic user interface design considerations, and some Internet design. Skills with various graphics software, such as Adobe Photoshop, are very important.

486. Introduction to Relational Databases using Oracle
(3-0-3)
This course provides the student a working knowledge of enterprise relational database systems and how they can be used in the development of applications. The course will utilize the Oracle enterprise relational database, but the principles and skills learned in this course will apply to other relational database systems. The student will learn the terminology and fundamental concepts of relational database design and Structured Query Language (SQL) and develop a relational database for an application.

489. Client/Server Technology
(3-0-3)
Client/Server Technology is a relatively new concept that promises to dramatically change the information technology industry. Client/Server Technology is a paradigm or model for the interaction between concurrently executing software systems.

490A. Special Project Arts and Letters
(3-0-3)
This course gives students an opportunity to apply their information technology skills to create a project in their first major. Students will work with a faculty member in their first major to design and develop a functional application (including, but not limited to, a Web site, database, or CD-ROM).

496. Internship
(3-0-3)
Restriction: CAPP seniors only.
This encompasses working with various civic, public and/or private organizations using acquired computer applications knowledge and skills. Credit is given only if work is done in the information systems area of an organization.

498. Special Studies
(V-0-V)
Individually designed coursework between a student and the advisor in the Computer Applications Program. This course involves working on a project either involved in programming or working with multimedia tools.

*The University Seminar may be selected from an appropriate history, social science, fine arts, or literature course, or the first course in theology or philosophy.

*The arts and letters student is required to complete one fine arts and one literature course, plus one additional history or social science course.

Two courses in the intermediate or advanced series complete the requirement. Beginning or elementary series require three semesters’ work to fulfill the language requirement.

†Courses specified by the student’s major engineering department. Number varies depending on program.

‡Courses necessary to fulfill the requirements for a major in the student’s major arts and letters department.

Minimum total for the five-year program to fulfill degree requirements in both colleges is 170 to 180 credit hours.

Education

Elementary Education

The Notre Dame student taking elementary education at Saint Mary’s College also must complete a Notre Dame major along with the appropriate college requirements. This process normally takes five years. Summer school can accelerate the progress toward certification. Notre Dame undergraduates interested in one of the professional teacher education programs must apply to the education department NO LATER than the first semester of the sophomore year. Those interested in the elementary education program are encouraged to take the prerequisite course, EDU 201, at Saint Mary’s in the second semester of their first year of studies.

Secondary Education

(including junior high or middle school)

The following Notre Dame majors have been approved for secondary education licensing through the Education Department at Saint Mary’s College.

1. In the College of Science: biology; chemistry; mathematics; physics.
2. In the College of Arts and Letters: English; languages (French, German, Spanish, Latin); art; social studies (history and political science). Students interested in a secondary license in social studies must also complete additional course work in political science or history (depending on the major) and in one other area: sociology, economics, or psychology.

Please contact Dr. Julianne Turner, Notre Dame advisor for education, for more information and help with planning at (574) 631-3429 or turner.37@nd.edu.
WASHINGTON PROGRAM

Notre Dame Director:
John Eriksen
Executive Director in Washington:
Thomas Kellenberg

Students in the Notre Dame Washington Program live, study, and work in the nation’s capital in either the fall or spring semester. The program seeks students who are interested in Washington, D.C. It invites applications by students interested in studying amidst the high energy and excitement of national politics and policy.

The program combines coursework with internships in government organizations, Congress, non-governmental organizations, the media and cultural institutions. The program is located in a historic and secure neighborhood in northwest Washington, and students have easy access to their internship sites, research facilities, and cultural opportunities. Students live in modern, well-fitted apartments in a building that includes study space, computers, and classroom facilities.

Students earn 15 credit hours in the Washington program. They take a six-credit seminar and two other three-credit courses and earn three credits for the internship. Students can do an independent project related to their interests or an internship that substitutes for one of the three-credit courses. Students work with the program staff on campus and in Washington to locate internships that will be most suitable for their interests and experiences.

Students of any major and college are encouraged to apply for the Washington Program. The program is open to sophomores, juniors, and seniors. There is no additional charge for the Notre Dame Washington Program beyond regular Notre Dame tuition and room-and-board fees.

For more information, see our Web site at www.nd.edu/-semester, or visit our office in 346 O’Shaughnessy.

Interdisciplinary Minors Within the College

During the junior and senior years, students may elect to complete one or more interdepartmental minors in addition to the departmental major sequence. Composed of 15 hours of class work chosen from at least two departments, these minors encourage students to think from an interdisciplinary perspective about a given issue or topic. Requirements for completion are determined by the faculty director in consultation with the relevant college committee. Current offerings include Catholic Social Tradition; Education, Schooling, and Society; Gender Studies; Hesburgh Program in Public Service; Journalism, Ethics, and Democracy; Medieval Studies; Peace Studies; Philosophy and Literature; Philosophy, Politics, and Economics; Religion and Literature; and Science, Technology, and Values. These were formerly called concentrations and are described in detail below.

CATHOLIC SOCIAL TRADITION

Director:
Todd David Whitmore
Executive Committee:
R. Scott Appleby (history); Michael Baxter, C.S.C. (theology); Jay Dolan (history); Rev. Patrick Gaffney, C.S.C. (anthropology); Maura A. Ryan (theology); Robert Sullivan (history); Paul Wehman (philosophy); Charles Wilbur (economics)

The Minor in Catholic Social Tradition is an interdisciplinary program that serves as a resource for Notre Dame undergraduates to learn Catholicism’s social tradition.

Catholicism offers a longstanding and profound tradition of thought and teaching that addresses, from a normative standpoint, the full range of social spheres. It does so through a constellation of concepts that, taken as a whole, give articulation to a coherent yet variegated vision of the good society. Such concepts include those of solidarity, the common good, the just wage, human rights, the free economy, subsidiarity, and the option for the poor.

Sources for the tradition go back as far as the Bible and develop even in the early church fathers. Medieval writings on topics such as usury and the origins and proper exercise of kingship bring an unprecedented level of detail to Christian analysis of the just society. Pope Leo XIII inaugurates Catholicism’s effort to bring its social tradition to bear on industrial society in his 1891 encyclical, Rerum Novarum (The Condition of Labor). Since then, popes have drawn upon Rerum Novarum and the social tradition to broaden and develop Leo’s set of concerns in encyclicals often titled—as with Pius XII’s Quadragesimo Anno, Paul VI’s Octogesima Adveniens, and John Paul II’s 1991 Centesimus Annus—in accordance with their relationship to the earlier document. In doing so, the popes and the Second Vatican Council have addressed issues ranging across all spheres of social life from the family to the state to the church. The U.S. bishops have made sophisticated application of these teachings to the specific circumstances of the United States.

Unfortunately, many Catholics are unaware of this tradition. Pope John Paul II writes, “It must be asked how many Christians really know and put into practice the principles of the church’s social doctrine.” The U.S. bishops concur. While “Catholic social teaching is a central and essential element of our faith,” it is still the case that “our social heritage is unknown by many Catholics.” At the same time, graduates of Notre Dame move on to assume leadership positions, often quite advanced ones, in a broad spectrum of social spheres, including politics, law, business, education, the media, and the military. (For example: national security advisor, president of Panama, attorney general of California, CEO of Mobil Corporation, president of the Chicago Mercantile Exchange, president of nine universities other than Notre Dame, executive producer of “Nightline,” and secretary of the Air Force.) The Program in Catholic Social Tradition serves as a resource for Notre Dame undergraduates to learn the tradition so that it can inform life both before and after graduation.

The Minor in Catholic Social Tradition involves 15 credit hours of coursework, including a core course (three credits), three electives (each three credits), and three one-credit colloquia/social concerns seminars. The core course will have three components:

1. The close reading of classic texts of the Catholic Social Tradition, particularly but not exclusively the papal and conciliar documents from Pope Leo XIII’s Rerum Novarum to John Paul II’s Centesimus Annus. Other texts will include source documents (e.g. writings by Thomas Aquinas and Augustine) and contemporary appropriations (e.g. writings by liberation theologians and neo-conservatives).
2. Immersion in professional context. Each student will find a placement in a location similar to that student’s anticipated profession. The student is to observe, interview and, to the extent possible, participate in the life of the setting. For instance, the students can observe a law or architectural firm or a medical practice. Here, the student will keep an ongoing journal as a “pastoral ethnography” of the setting (an interpretation of the practice in the setting in light of the Catholic social tradition).

3. Final project: Students are to articulate or construct a setting in their anticipated profession in light of the Catholic social tradition (e.g., imagine and construct what a law firm/health clinic/ad agency would look like if it practiced in light of the Catholic social tradition).

The electives will be chosen by the student in consultation with the director from among courses offered in the University. The one-credit courses will be devoted to the critical reading and discussion of one or two major works each semester. So-when will be devoted to the critical reading and discussion of one or two major works each semester. So-

EDUCATION, SCHOOLING, AND SOCIETY

The primary goal of this interdisciplinary minor is to serve students who want to understand learning and education as complex and challenging aspects of human and societal experience. Education is one of the central and shared experiences of people in contemporary societies in the United States and around the world. It is both an end in itself and a means to many personal, professional, and spiritual goals. Thus, understanding its history and traditions, analyzing its processes, and critiquing its goals are of great importance to all of us.

Most societies rely on education to understand the complex and challenging aspects of human and societal experience. Education is one of the central and shared experiences of people in contemporary societies in the United States and around the world. It is both an end in itself and a means to many personal, professional, and spiritual goals. Thus, understanding its history and traditions, analyzing its processes, and critiquing its goals are of great importance to all of us.

Objectives of the Minor. The Gender Studies Program was inaugurated in 1988 to foster intellectual inquiry and discussion of gender issues at the University at a time in which the enrollment of undergraduate women and men was just reaching parity.

The minor offers students the opportunity to explore in-depth the rapidly developing scholarship in the areas of gender, women’s studies, men’s studies, feminist theory, queer theory, sexuality, and sexual orientation. It aspires to two interwining pedagogical objectives: first, to allow students to become proficient in the crossdisciplinary mode of inquiry that is central to the exploration of issues of gender; second, to prepare undergraduates to engage issues of gender after they graduate, whether they undertake advanced study in graduate and professional programs devoted to the study of gender or enter the workforce.

Requirements. 15 credits (five courses) including:
GSC 101/201: Introduction to Gender Studies, which is team-taught by members of the Gender Studies faculty and maintains a cross-disciplinary focus (three credits); three three-credit courses from a list of approved selections; GSC 495: Gender Studies Practicum, a course that allows senior concentrators to pursue independent field work and research on issues of gender.

Courses include:
GSC 101/201: Introduction to Gender Studies;
GSC 445/446: Gender Studies Practicum.

Gender Crossings; Gender in International Art; History of American Women; Women: Alternative Philosophical Perspectives; Women in Antiquity; Sociology of Masculinity; Romanticism: Gender Crossings; Gender in International Relations; Gender Issues in the Law; Feminist and Multicultural Theologies; Gender/Sexuality/Power: Medieval Europe.

INTERDISCIPLINARY MINORS WITHIN THE COLLEGE

The health of American society is closely related to good public policy and competent, ethical public service. Thus, awareness of public policy and public service is not only the foundation for public-sector careers, but it is also a necessity for those who will work in the nonprofit sector or the private sector and for those who seek to be knowledgeable citizens.

The Hesburgh Program in Public Service seeks to prepare Notre Dame students for a life of active and effective citizenship as well as for the possibility of careers in public service. The program honors the principle of engaged leadership and the goals of disseminating public policy knowledge to current and future public leaders. The Hesburgh Program offers an interdisciplinary curriculum designed to inform students about the dimensions of policymaking, public administration and policy evaluation, and to develop skills in research, sensitivity to ethical issues, and appreciation for the character and limits of constitutional democracy.

HESBURGH PROGRAM IN PUBLIC SERVICE

The health of American society is closely related to good public policy and competent, ethical public service. Thus, awareness of public policy and public service is not only the foundation for public-sector careers, but it is also a necessity for those who will work in the nonprofit sector or the private sector and for those who seek to be knowledgeable citizens.

The Hesburgh Program in Public Service seeks to prepare Notre Dame students for a life of active and effective citizenship as well as for the possibility of careers in public service. The program honors the principle of engaged leadership and the goals of disseminating public policy knowledge to current and future public leaders. The Hesburgh Program offers an interdisciplinary curriculum designed to inform students about the dimensions of policymaking, public administration and policy evaluation, and to develop skills in research, sensitivity to ethical issues, and appreciation for the character and limits of constitutional democracy.
Normally, students apply for admission to the minor late in their freshman year or early in their sophomore year. Students who transfer to Notre Dame as juniors may be admitted through the first semester of their junior year. Students should have completed or be completing POLS 140 or 240 and ECON 115 or 225, be in good academic standing, and demonstrate a strong interest in public policy and public service.

The minor in the Hesburgh Program involves 15 hours of coursework. The "gateway" course to the program is HESB 350, "Introduction to Public Policy," normally taken in the second semester of the sophomore year. At the middle level of the program, students will take one course drawn from each of three categories of courses approved by the program. These are research skills, values, and institutions and processes. During the senior year, students who have been on a summer internship will register for the internship research seminar, HESB 450, that builds on their field experience. Other students will take one of several senior-level policy seminars identified by the program each semester.

The Hesburgh Program offers students the opportunity for summer internships in public policy contexts through the Gary Lyman Internships in Public Service. In the fall of their junior year, Hesburgh students may apply for the Lyman Internship. Up to 20 students are selected in a competitive process. Students selected as Lyman interns are aided by the program in securing appropriate internships, usually in Washington, D.C. Lyman interns receive a taxable stipend to defray their cost of living while in their internship, and a sum for the cost of travel between their home and their internship city.

During the course of the academic year, the Hesburgh Program sponsors student public-policy-related forums and activities and campus visits to Notre Dame by public figures. They give public addresses, teach in the classroom and are available for conversations with students and faculty. The staff works closely with students on postgraduate planning, including employment, professional schools such as law and public policy and academic graduate programs.

John W. Gallivan Program in Journalism, Ethics, and Democracy

Director: Robert Schmuhl

The John W. Gallivan Notre Dame Program in Journalism, Ethics, and Democracy offers several courses for students interested in careers in print and broadcast journalism. Begun in 1997 with a grant from the John S. and James L. Knight Foundation and now endowed by the family of John W. Gallivan, this minor combines professional training in journalistic skills along with examination of philosophical concerns related to the practice of journalism. For example, what ethical issues arise in preparing a particular story? Or what role does—and should—journalism play in a self-governing society?

The journalism minor requires completion of 15 hours in addition to a student’s major requirements and a news-related internship during either the summer or the academic year. Fundamentals of Journalism is the first, or gateway, class for students participating in the program. Other courses that count for the concentration include The Craft of Journalism, Writing and Editing, Writing for Publication, Persuasion, Commentary, Criticism, and Broadcast Journalism. In addition, new courses are currently being developed. No more than two courses beyond Fundamentals of Journalism concentrating on journalistic techniques will count for the required 15 hours.

The director of the program is Robert Schmuhl of the Department of American Studies. An advisory committee of Notre Dame graduates in journalism helps guide the program. Members include Tom Bettge, executive producer, ABC News Nightline; Bill Dwyre, sports editor, Los Angeles Times; John W. Gallivan, chairman of the board and publisher emeritus of the Kearns-Tribune Corporation; Monica Yant Kinney, metro columnist, The Philadelphia Inquirer; John McMeel, chairman and president, Andrews McMeel Universal; Jim Naughton, president, Poynter Institute for Media Studies; Anne Thompson, national correspondent, NBC News; Kelley Tuthill, reporter, WCVB-TV, Boston, Massachusetts; Don Wycliff, public editor, Chicago Tribune.

Medieval Studies

The Minor in Medieval Studies allows students who are committed to other programs of study to pursue interests in European culture of the Middle Ages and to cross the limits of individual disciplines as a means of understanding the changing social, economic, legal, intellectual and artistic systems of medieval Europe.

Students may declare their intention to undertake a minor in medieval studies to the director of undergraduate studies at any time before the end of their third year. The undergraduate director will then act as their minor advisor and help them select a set of courses that form a coherent program of study, often in conjunction with their major if possible. Students must take five courses in three of the 10 departments affiliated with the Medieval Institute (Anthropology, Art History, Classical and Oriental Languages, English, German and Slavic Languages, History, Music, Philosophy, Romance Languages, and Theology). Courses counted toward the major may not be used for the minor. A list of course offerings is available from the Medieval Institute.

Minors, like majors, are invited to participate fully in the life of the Medieval Institute. They are welcome to attend institute lectures and to participate in the institute’s own graduation ceremony, held each year before the Baccalaureate Mass.

Program of Studies. Peace Studies is defined as the interdisciplinary examination of the conditions that make for peace. It also investigates the obstacles to the realization of these conditions, drawing on theories and methods from diverse disciplines to find ways for the development of a just and peaceful world order. Peace Studies relates scholarship to praxis and challenges those who engage in it to develop new ways of thinking and acting in the world.

Notre Dame’s Peace Studies program divides its curriculum of more than 50 courses into three overlapping but distinct areas:

Area A: The role of international norms, institutions, and states in a peaceful world order. An exploration of ways of making governmental and intergovernmental institutions more effective and representative, and of strengthening governmental compliance with fundamental norms of peace and human rights.

Area B: The impact of religious, philosophical, and cultural influences on peace. The study of the ethics of the use of force, theological and philosophical visions of global justice, the ways in which the world religious traditions foment violence or encourage peace, the practice of nonviolence, and the linguistic, literary, and historical dimensions of cultures of peace.

Area C: The promotion of social, economic, and environmental justice. The study of social change, with specific attention to the role of nongovernmental organizations, commercial enterprises, and states in fostering sustainable economic development, respect for human rights, conflict resolution and nonviolent conflict transformation, support of gender and family issues, and protection of the environment.

In both the Supplementary Major (24 credit hours of required coursework) and in the Minor (15 credit hours of required coursework), students will complete an introduction course, explore the three key areas of Peace Studies, and participate in an integrative Senior Seminar.

The Supplementary Major
The Supplementary Major in Peace Studies requires completion of the introductory course in Peace Studies (3 credit hours), one course in each of the three areas of study (9 credit hours), three elective courses in Peace Studies (9 credit hours), and the Senior Seminar (3 credit hours). The program for a Supplementary Major in Peace Studies follows:

- IIPS 320 Introduction to Peace Studies
- Area A one course from list
- Area B one course from list
- Area C one course from list
- [elective]
- [elective]
- IIPS 490 Senior Seminar

The Minor
The Minor in Peace Studies requires completion of the introductory course in Peace Studies (3 credit hours), one course in each of the three areas of study (9 credit hours), and the Senior Seminar (3 credit hours). The program for a minor in Peace Studies follows:

- IIPS 320 Introduction to Peace Studies
- Area A one course from list
- Area B one course from list
- Area C one course from list
- IIPS 490 Senior Seminar

Information on Peace Studies. Peace Studies at Notre Dame is centered in the Joan B. Kroc Institute for International Peace Studies (in the Hesburgh Center for International Studies). Information on courses available, faculty fellows in Peace Studies, and ongoing activities in Peace Studies can be found there as well as on the Institute’s Web site, www.nd.edu/~krocinst.

PHILOSOPHY AND LITERATURE

The Minor in Philosophy and Literature is designed for students who want to pursue an interdisciplinary course of studies that focuses on the intersections between literature and philosophy. Majors from any literature department or from philosophy are eligible for the concentration.

Literature and philosophy have always shared many of their concerns, and the minor is designed to explore this common ground and to establish an interdepartmental forum for both formal study and informal contacts. The minor should also be excellent preparation for students interested in graduate studies.

The curriculum of the Minor in Philosophy and Literature consists of 15 credit hours, distributed as follows:

- A core course: “Studies in Literature and Philosophy,” taken with the permission of the director of the P/L Minor and crosslisted in English and philosophy, and/or the department in which it originates. This course is to be taken in the first semester of the minor (spring of the sophomore or junior year). This gateway course is an intensive seminar and will help students and faculty from the various disciplines to speak a common language.
- Four credit hours.
- At least two one-credit colloquia in the semesters following the core seminar. The colloquia will be devoted to the critical reading and discussion of one or two major works each semester. The colloquia will build on the spirit de corps and intellectual common ground established in the core course.
- Three three-credit courses approved by the minor committee, at least two in the disciplines in which the student is not a major. This part of the curriculum will require written approval of the director of P/L.

Students are encouraged, though not required, to write a senior essay (in the department in which they are majoring) that in some way reflects the interdisciplinary concerns developed in P/L.

For further information, students should contact Prof. Alain Tournayman, Department of Romance Languages, Alain.P.Tournayman.2@nd.edu.
Interdisciplinary Minors within the College

Philosophy, Politics, and Economics

The Minor in Philosophy, Politics, and Economics (PPE) is designed for students and faculty with serious interests at the intersection of political theory, political philosophy and economic theory. The minor integrates these three fields, and through seminars and colloquia strives to create an intellectual community among students and faculty that goes beyond formal coursework. To be eligible for PPE, students normally must major in either philosophy, political science, economics, or the Program of Liberal Studies (who for PPE requirements are treated as philosophy students). The Justice Seminar, the gateway course into the minor, is always offered in the fall semester; applications for the Justice Seminar are taken in the middle of the preceding spring term.

The PPE faculty committee consists of David O’Connor (philosophy), Paul Weithman (philosophy), Mary Keys (political science), L. John Roos (political science), Philip Mirowski (economics), Jennifer Warlick (economics), and Esther-Mirjam Sent (economics). Committee members also serve as advisors for PPE students.

The PPE curriculum consists of 15 credit hours, usually distributed over four semesters, as follows:

A. The Justice Seminar (crosslisted as POLS 450, ECON 333, and PHIL 433), an intensive three-credit seminar that is the gateway course into the minor, taken in the fall semester of sophomore or junior year. Three credit hours.

B. Three one-credit PPE Colloquia, each usually devoted to the critical reading and discussion of one or two major works, normally taken in the three semesters following the Justice Seminar. Three credit hours.

C. Three approved three-credit courses from the two fields outside the student’s first major, with at least one course in both non-major fields. Nine credit hours.

Total credit hours: 15.

PPE students are also encouraged (but not required) to write a senior thesis in their major field that reflects the interdisciplinary focus of the minor.

Persons to contact: PPE directors—John Roos, Department of Political Science; and David O’Connor, Department of Philosophy.

Religion and Literature

Directors:
Joseph Buttigieg and Collin Meinsner

The interdisciplinary minor in Religion and Literature offers an intellectually rigorous and scholarly approach to formalized study of the interrelations between “Religion” and “Literature” broadly construed. The minor will draw on the rich resources Notre Dame offers, including the faculty and intellectual traditions of Theology and the various literature departments that exist at Notre Dame. The minor’s focus is both broad and refined. Its breadth offers students the opportunity to investigate the interanimating and cross-disciplinary influences of “Religion” and “Literature.” As broad coverage inevitably leads to sharpened questions, students will enjoy the freedom to pursue a specific interest through a refined senior thesis.

The minor enjoys a special consultative and working relationship with many of the university’s already identified centers of excellence, capitalizing on both their long-term faculty and other resource expertise as well as making full use of their visiting fellows, special seminars, and general lecture programs. To this end, students who choose the Religion and Literature concentration have extensive and first-rate scholarly resources available to support their own intellectual development.

Curricular Requirements

Normally, students apply for admission to the minor late in their freshman year or early in their sophomore year. The minor requires students to complete 15 credit hours of approved coursework; of these no more than 3, and in special cases 6 credit hours at the 200 or sophomore level will be accepted toward fulfillment of the concentration’s requirements. The balance of the course work must be completed through course work at the senior (300–400) level. Of the overall 15 hour requirement, 3 credit hours will be awarded for completion of the senior thesis. It is intended that students will, in effect, do a thesis inspired by issues which have arisen in their course work for the minor.

One entry-level “gateway” course will be required of each student desiring a minor concentration in Religion and Literature. Several courses will serve this function, and students must take one of them in order to complete the minor. Ideally the student will complete the required class early in his or her course of study.

In addition to the gateway course and senior thesis, students will be required to complete three 3-credit courses approved by the Religion and Literature committee, at least two in a discipline other than the student’s major.

In order to promote intellectual cohesiveness within the minor, participating students will be required to take part in a series of seminars and talks organized by the Religion and Literature committee. These events will be structured to take advantage of offerings by Notre Dame faculty members or lectures by visiting scholars whose topics relate to the program’s focus. The seminar or lecture presentations will serve to function as either a point of departure or a concluding event in a short, focused study which will include some preparatory reading of material salient to the presentation.

Science and technology are pivotal forces in modern society and play key roles in shaping cultural sensibilities in the modern world. Indeed, our technologies are reflected in our institutions, our work, our expectations, even in our moral problems. Science, Technology, and Values (STV) is an interdisciplinary minor within which faculty and students from a variety of disciplines and different colleges can reflectively explore the nature of science and technology as human enterprises, interacting in complex ways with our values and social institutions.

The program helps sponsor a wide range of crosslisted courses taught by faculty representing the humanities, the social sciences and the natural sciences. Students electing an STV minor can focus their work on areas of particular interest, such as Science, Technology and Public Policy; Ethics, Ecology and Environment; Medical Ethics; Ethical Issues in Science and Technology; Humanistic and Social Aspects of Medicine; Science and Technology As Cultural Phenomena; History and Philosophy of Technology.

The development of a strong environmental sciences program at Notre Dame has provided a new opportunity for students to combine the STV sciences program at Notre Dame has provided a new opportunity for students to combine the STV program with an environmental sciences major or minor. The STV program is collaborating with the Environmental Sciences Program in sponsoring a Notre Dame “semester abroad” program at the Biosphere 2 facility in Arizona.

Students electing a minor in STV must take at least five courses (15 hours) from among those offered under the sponsorship of the STV program. These must include the core course (STV 256). Students are urged to satisfy this requirement early in the program. At least one course also must be taken from clusters one, two, and three below, and either one additional course from these clusters, or from the elective list in Cluster Four. All STV courses are crosslisted.

Because individuals attracted to the STV minor have diverse interests and differing academic backgrounds, the program advisor works closely with each student to help select courses that will complement the student’s major program or be most relevant to particular career aspirations. ### Area Studies Minors

Program of Studies. The College of Arts and Letters offers its students the opportunity to pursue an interdisciplinary sequence of area studies minor that may supplement the major. Currently, there are minors in African studies, Asian studies, Irish studies, Latin American studies, Mediterranean/Middle East studies, Russian and East European studies and West European studies.

The purpose of these minors is to assemble the courses dealing with the language, literature, history, politics, anthropology, philosophy, sociology and economics of each area. In this way a meaningful course structure is available to students who wish to concentrate their scholarly interest upon a cultural or geographical area as well as upon an interdisciplinary approach. Such programs can be especially useful to students who plan a career in international business, international organizations or government service or who intend to do graduate work in one of these areas.

The student who wishes to complete one of the area studies minors is required to take at least four area studies courses (12 hours) distributed over three different departments. These courses must be taken in addition to those required for the major. The student must also take courses in a language of the area being studied (Russian or an East European language for the Russian studies program; Spanish or Portuguese for the Latin American studies program; French, German or Italian for the West European studies program; a Mediterranean language for the Mediterranean/Middle East studies program; Irish for the Irish studies program; and Japanese or Chinese for the Asian studies program). In most cases the required number of courses will be equivalent to those required to satisfy the arts and letters language requirement, but students should check with program directors for the specific requirements of a given area. While not required to take additional language instruction for the African studies program, students who plan to continue their African interest at the graduate level are encouraged to develop a competency in Swahili, French, Portuguese, or Arabic. In the senior year, each student must submit a satisfactory essay based upon research that combines the major discipline with the area studies curriculum.

Students interested in an area studies minor should consult the director (listed below).
African Studies

A. Peter Walsh, director
Students wishing to develop their understanding of Africa may pursue the undergraduate African Studies minor. This involves taking four courses in three departments. In addition, a research essay must be completed (AL 495A Area Studies Essay: Africa). While no additional language instruction beyond the college requirement is expected, students wishing to continue their interests in Africa at the graduate level are encouraged to study French. Students who anticipate working toward the African Studies minor should contact Prof. Peter Walsh, Director of African Studies, Room 123, Institute for International Peace Studies.

Asian Studies

Dian Murray, director
This minor provides opportunities for students to develop an interdisciplinary understanding of Asia. Students may satisfy the requirements for the minor by taking four area-related courses (12 hours) distributed over three departments and by writing an essay (AS 495 Area Studies Essay: Asia) with one of the Asian studies faculty. The student must also complete one year of intensive or three semesters of non-intensive Chinese or Japanese language. Those wishing to declare this minor should do so with Dian Murray, Director of Asian Studies, 457 Deemo, and those already enrolled in the program should meet with her during the pre-registration period of each semester for advising.

European Studies

A. James McAdams, director
Formerly known as the Western European Area Studies Program, this minor now includes the study of East-Central Europe as well as Western Europe. All the East-Central European states are now under consideration for inclusion in the European Union. Students will study the politics, history and culture of these areas as well as the language of a particular country.

Students may fulfill their course requirements by selecting courses recommended each semester by the Nanovic Institute. These course listings are available each semester at the institute.

Students should contact their department representatives or the director, James McAdams, as soon as possible in order to enroll in the program and select appropriate courses. For those with language skills, other courses are available in the language departments. Some courses, particularly those in a foreign language, will need the permission of the instructor.

Irish Studies

Christopher Fox, director
The Keough Institute for Irish Studies provides students with a unique opportunity to explore Ireland’s extraordinary tradition in literature (in both the English and Irish languages) and distinctive historical development, including its influence on the history of the United States. The Irish Studies faculty includes leaders in several fields, including Literature, History, Film, and Northern Irish politics. The Irish Studies Program also organizes a calendar of intellectual and cultural activities in which undergraduates are encouraged to participate; recent visitors to campus have included Seamus Heaney and John Hume, both Nobel Prize winners, and other leading Irish writers and public figures.

Minor
The core of the Program is a Minor in Irish Studies. The Minor helps students develop their understanding of Irish society, culture, and politics through both coursework and firsthand experience of Ireland. To qualify for the Minor, students must (a) demonstrate proficiency in Irish language (by taking IRST 101, 102 and 103); (b) complete four Irish Studies courses (mainly in the fields of history, English, film, television and theater), and (c) write a capstone essay in their senior year that links the Minor with their Major. Qualifying courses are listed in the Schedule of Classes under IRST; the list is available each semester from 1146 Flanner Hall.

Dublin Program
The home of the Dublin program is the Keough-Notre Dame Centre in Newman House on St. Stephen’s Green in the historic heart of Ireland’s capital. Each semester, some 35 Notre Dame students enroll for courses in the Centre and at Trinity College Dublin, University College Dublin, and the National College of Art and Design. The program includes several field trips and a variety of social and cultural activities. Students taking the Minor in Irish Studies have a distinct advantage when applying for this highly competitive program.

Irish Internships
The Keough Institute for Irish Studies annually awards Donald and Marilyn Keough Irish Internships, which place undergraduates in internship positions in Dublin relating to Irish politics and commerce, culture, and society. In the past, students have been placed in the Irish parliament, government departments, the Irish Film Centre, and various social service organizations. The Internships last for a period of seven weeks. Two Internships are reserved for students taking the Minor in Irish Studies.

For further information, students should consult Prof. Christopher Fox, director; telephone 631-3555.

Latin American Studies Program

Christopher Welna, director
This program promotes opportunities for students to deepen their understanding of the region through a variety of courses, campus activities, internships, and firsthand overseas learning experiences. Through the Kellogg Institute, the program offers a calendar of cultural events, summer research and internship grants, current affairs panels and regular talks on Latin America by Notre Dame faculty and visiting lecturers. In addition, the institute brings several Visiting Fellows each semester who are from Latin America or who specialize in the region; these Fellows visit classes and meet with students.

The core of the program is a minor in Latin American Studies. The minor aims to give students well-rounded training that complements their major area of study and to make this training easily recognized on a graduating student’s transcript. In order to qualify for the minor, students must demonstrate proficiency in Spanish or Portuguese (through the three-course sequence in the Romance Languages Department or advanced placement), complete four courses on Latin America that are recognized on a graduating student transcript. In Qualifying courses are listed each semester in the Schedule of Classes under LAST. They include Contemporary Latin American History, Economic Development of Latin America, Latin American Politics, Liberation Theology, Sociology of Development, and Spanish-American and Brazilian Literature. The program offers the John J. Kennedy Prize annually for an outstanding senior essay dealing with a Latin American topic. The summer research fellowships are offered through Kellogg to students after their junior year to encourage undergraduates to undertake original research on international subjects. The summer internships aim to provide undergraduates real-world experience in dealing with Latin American issues. Recently, internships have been placed at the Washington Office on Latin America and the Center of Concern in Washington, D.C.; the Minnesota Advocates for Human Rights in Minneapolis; the Nature Conservancy in Brazil and in Washington; FUSADES in El Salvador; and Accesso in Costa Rica. For more complete information about courses that qualify each semester for the minor degree, the calendar of events or the summer research and internship competitions, please consult the LASP Web page at www.nd.edu/~kellogg/laasp/about/index.html.

Students are also invited to consult affiliated faculty, who include Thomas Anderson, Isabel Ferreira, Maria Rosa Olivera-Williams, and Kristine Illesen (Romance languages); Michael Coppedge, Frances Hagopian, Michael Francis, Gretchen Helmke, Guillermo O’Dennell, Scott Mainwaring, Rev. Timothy Scully, and Christopher Welna (political science); Ted Beatty (history); Jaime Ros (economics); Gregory Downey, Roberto da Matta, and Victoria Sanford (anthropology); J. Samuel Valenzuela (sociology); Juan Rivera (business); and Rev. Robert Pelton (theology).

MEDITERRANEAN/MIDDLE EAST STUDIES

Joseph Amar, director

This is a broad-based program that includes all aspects of the ancient and modern cultures that surround the Mediterranean. Courses from three regions apply. In Europe, this includes the study of Classical Greece and Rome as well as modern Italy, France, Spain and Portugal. Courses on the Middle East are related to the study of Semitic peoples and their cultures, languages, religions and politics. In North Africa, Arab and Francophone history and civilization are the focus.

RUSSIAN AND EAST EUROPEAN STUDIES

David Gasperetti, director

The program in Russian and East European Studies enables students to enrich their understanding of the region through a variety of courses in language, literature, history, politics, and economics while also encouraging and supporting the acquisition of firsthand experience in the culture of the area. Its largest initiative provides grants for summer courses taken from accredited programs, either in the United States or abroad. Traditionally, this has meant language study in Moscow, St. Petersburg, Warsaw, and Kraków, but language study elsewhere in Eastern Europe as well as cultural programs and internships may also qualify for support. The program’s lecture series allows students to expand their knowledge of Russia and Eastern Europe beyond the scope of their coursework by supplying a continuous source of fresh ideas about the region. Each year, the program invites nationally and internationally renowned scholars to campus to share their latest research in fields pertinent to the minor.

Other courses may apply with the permission of the director.
